

Rocking the music biz:
Tom Robinson is hot, gay — and making it. Big. p 16

Zapping the New Czars:
dissident Angelo Pezanna braves the KGB in Moscow
— and gets the boot. p 25

Moving in on Mystery:
Eve Zaremba's version of the macho world of crime fiction includes a dyke detective.

THE Body Politic

AUGUST 1978 GAY LIBERATION JOURNAL $1

PorNOGRAPHY
Erotic liberation or sexual terror?

It was a bad week for Lyn MacDonald.
She was handed her separation certificate
— and her eviction notice.
Then she decided to do something about it.

"Due to the fact you being a lesbian..."

by Chris Bearchell

For two weeks prior to Thursday, June 1st, Lyn MacDonald was a full-time clerk at Master Variety Store in London, Ontario. On that day she was fired.

"Everything had been going fine," Lyn remembers, "I had been told that I was a good, hard worker and that the boss was pleased with me. That day I was out having lunch with the boss' wife when she started pushing birth control on me. She was quite persistent, and a bit crying, so I told her that I didn't have any personal need for birth control. She asked me why and I told her I was gay. She was very good about it, but after lunch she told her husband. When I went to do my till at the end of the day, he handed me my separation slip. I asked him what was going on. He said, 'I don't have to tell you.' I asked, 'Would it have anything to do with your wife telling you I'm gay?' He said, 'Yeah, that's the reason. How get out of here...'"

How did Lyn respond? "When I found out that really was the reason, I was stunned and angry. That night I told some friends; by the next day it was all over town."

On Monday Lyn and Eileen Ranton, both members of the London Lesbian Collective, had been planning to put together the LLC's newsletter. "We decided to run off a thousand leaflets while we were at it. Telling people what had happened and asking them to boycott the store. Then we stuffed them in all the mail boxes in the area. I called the press, and the next day, Tuesday, we had a picket line. London's first gay picket. There were about ten of us there consistently — and as many as fifteen at times."

Even though dykes made up a clear majority of the picket line, that first day they were denounced as faggots. On the second day, at least one man figured out that he was confusing the sexes and began calling them "cunt lappers." The reactions of passers-by weren't all hostile. In fact, as Lyn explained, "Most people were indifferent — they just wanted to go in and get their shopping done — but there were a number of people who took the leaflet, read it, and then said, 'Well, I'm not shopping here...'"

And now did Byron Craughten, the store owner, react? He told the press August 1978 that business was booming. But he also tried, unsuccessfully, to get an injunction to stop the picketing. "When the picketing first started we were on the sidewalk moving around so we wouldn't block anyone. Craughten came speeding down Central Avenue and turned into the driveway, just missing me by about three inches. It was an obvious attempt to scare the shit out of me. If I had slapped back at that point, I would have been under his wheels. He was screaming out of the window, 'I didn't fire you because you're gay, I fired you because you're an asshole and a trouble-maker!'"

I asked Lyn what response London's first militant gay action received from the media. "Local London TV did a taped interview with me and showed some footage of the picket line itself. Two radio stations came by. Each time Craughten was interviewed his story changed. The first time he said, 'Yes, because she was gay that I fired her, but it was mainly because she couldn't get the prices right.' I'd worked there only two weeks, and he'd been telling me the whole time what a good worker I was. To the next reporter he said that I was rude to people, that I had been discussing my sexuality with long-time customers. Can't you just see me bagging milk and bread and talking about lesbian sex with the little old lady around the corner?"

"The second day we were out picketing, the store's part-time clerk — an older woman — came up to me with an instamatic camera. She said, 'This is for my granddaughter.' I want to show her what a woman looks like who kisses another woman's ass.' So I said, 'Fine, I hope your granddaughter's gay,' and she went into the store. Then she stood there in front of an all-glass door sticking her ass at us. We stayed very calm, just walking around in a circle. The she whipped up her top and pulled down her pants. Some kids were hanging around. They'd been calling us faggots and stuff, but they weren't really all that bad, mostly just curious. When this woman did her indecent exposure thing they were really freaked out. I mean, they'd been buying their jubes from her for years."

What kind of legal advice has Lyn had? "I've checked with a sympathetic lawyer every step of the way. So far I've had sound and free advice."

I asked if she had approached the Ontario Human Rights Commission. "Just the local branch, and they seemed very supportive as individuals, but gay people aren't protected by the Code, so all they could do was try to use moral suasion on my ex-boss. What a laugh! They don't have any real power to do anything."

"The day after I was on TV, I started getting hang-up phone calls. That same day the superintendent came to get up my apartment and told me to get out because I was barking a friend's cat for the summer. I said I'd get rid of the cat. He said I still had to go. When I pressed him for a reason he said, 'You're the lesbian I saw on TV!' I asked him to put it in writing. So he did. The eviction notice read: 'Dear Miss MacDonald, Due to the fact that you being a lesbian I have to ask you to move by July 31st, 1978...'"

"I found out when I checked with our lawyer that the super certainly hadn't given 'just cause', or sixty days notice. He kept coming up every day and bothering me. He'd shout at my friends or call me names. Around the end of the week, the owner of the building came by and said he'd heard I had a cat and had damaged the place. I told him to get the superintendent off my back. He said he would. Everything's been okay since. Even the phone calls have stopped."

It hasn't been easy for Lyn to get support. As she noted, "If it had been a career I'd lost or a really good job, more people would have been concerned. The consequences of the incident have been serious for her. 'I've always been aware that someday I could lose my job because I'm a homosexual, but I wouldn't have believed I'd be standing in front of a TV camera saying it. As far as getting another job goes, things look really dim because I have a record.' I'd been considering working in a prison. I've been there and didn't like what I saw. My personal goal was to get in as a guard and try to move up into the administrative levels. I had an interview the week before all this happened, with the head of the London Jail and I think it went really well. Now, after becoming a public lesbian, I think my chances are probably shot. Prisons just don't hire homosexuals."

Lyn went on to describe how her firing had led to the formation of a militant gay organization in London called the Gay Activist Group for Equality (GAGE). "This was the first instance in London where anyone has ever stood up and said they wouldn't take that kind of action. About ten of us got together and said, 'Hey, this happens all the time, it's just that there's no one to do anything about.' Since the picket, these people in GAGE who all work for the same company have been harassed. One was fired, the other two threatened for supporting the demo. Another woman's former lover had been forced to resign from a nursing job because she was gay. We'd seen too much of this and decided that a public, action-oriented gay group was needed. There are other organizations in town — the London Lesbian Collective and the Homophile Association of London Ontario (HALO) — but they aren't militant or public enough. They've given us moral support and that's important, but when you're trying to organize a picket line you need to know you can count on people for more than that."

Some time between late August and early October, Anita Bryant is scheduled to appear in London, and GAGE and the other gay organizations have become involved in a coalition with feminists to organize a response. "What we really need," Lyn emphasized, "is to have a strong gay voice in London and right now that means support from outside — other people, other groups."

What about Lyn's plans now? She said she'd be down at Canada Manpower at 8:30 the next morning. It sounded bleak. I asked her if London would ever be the same. "We hope not. We picketed for only about four hours and got a week of coverage. Even the weekend TV wrap-up focussed on the unhappy case of the 24-year-old variety store clerk who was fired for being a lesbian." It won't necessarily be easier later and for other people to come out, but we hope it will make other employers think twice before they fire or harass someone for being gay. They don't want to be embarrassed by a bunch of noisy picketers outside their businesses.

"And we'd be glad to be there." □

Body Politic/1

Editorials

What's next?

The definition of "indecent, immoral, treasonous and seditious" seems to have gotten awfully broad of late.

Canada Customs is in the habit of seizing any printed matter which, in the personal opinion of any officer, fits that vague description, one of the many prohibited categories in the Customs Tariff. There are no legally established criteria for clarifying what these words mean. Customs officers can — and do — seize just about anything they please. The onus is then on the person for whom the material was intended to prove that he or she should be allowed to have it. That can be an expensive — and onerous — effort.

Among the latest salacious items stopped at the border was the July issue of Christopher Street.

Christopher Street? Surely it would be hard to find a cleaner, less "offensive" magazine than this new 'work-based' journal. No "dirty" pictures, hardly ever a racy bit — in all, a quite proper and respectable publication.

Except for the fact that it is gay. After all, Customs officers don't read everything that comes across the border. They spot check. Things that are addressed to gay bookstores and organizations or to other alternative or revolutionary groups obviously come in for special attention, while identical parcels addressed to big book chains or distributors may escape scrutiny. We, after all, are easy to recognize. And we don't have much clout.

When material is stopped, Customs is supposed to notify the addressee and provide information on the right and the method — of appeal. Lately it seems they're too busy even for that: many people report that subscription copies of magazines and newspapers simply aren't arriving, even though the publishers confirm that they're being sent. Someone in the Post Office/Customs bureaucracy must be amassing quite a collection of "dangerous" literature.

What is suffering as this collection grows is, quite simply, the right to read material which does not bear an official government seal of approval. Moreover, Customs is not the only agency pushing to narrow the field of "allowable" reading matter. Ontario's family-law attorney-general, Roy McMurtry, has long been allied with provincial and municipal police forces in a highly-publicized — and, he must assume, politically profitable — campaign to squelch "pornography" — including this paper. If freedom of expression is eroded in the process, well, that's unfortunate (but if that's the price we have to pay to keep this filth from our children...).

When the federal Parliament reconvenes in the fall it will consider new legislation aimed at curbing pornography and prostitution. Or so they say. The new powers granted to police and the courts to facilitate this "clean-up" are considerable. And frightening.

In many communities, fundamentalist groups like Renaissance Canada are having success getting "controversial" reading matter out of the public schools. Hemmingway, Salinger, Alice Munro and Margaret Laurence are disappearing from the libraries, eased out by timid principals and trustees acting under the force of law but out of simple fear. It's book-burning time again.

All this is happening right here, now. And no one is really doing anything about it. Civil liberties and human rights groups in this country are few in number, not strong and often reluctant to touch emotionally charged issues like censorship or pornography — or the "protection" of all of us from "indecency." Even when they do speak up, no one in the government pays much attention. Appeals to fear and ignorance seem to generate more votes than concern for abstractions like civil rights.

Gay people are prime objects of fear and ignorance — and worse. When simply being gay is enough to snare a perfectly proper, polite magazine like Christopher Street at the border, it's time to speak up.

And not politely. ☐

This Issue

Cold gruel

Once a year, for almost as many years as TBP has been in existence, we have devoted a good part of an issue to coverage of the annual national conference of lesbians and gay men. The first of these gatherings was held in Quebec City in 1973. The most recent one in Halifax was the sixth.

Reporting these conferences has always been a trial. TBP is, by its very nature, both participant and observer — our involvement as a gay organization is recognized to be part of our coverage as expected to be "objective" nonetheless.

That balance, however, is not the only one we have to strike. We also have to consider that, to most gay people, extended reports on workshops, plenaries, voting schemes, resolutions and floor fights are about as appealing as cold gruel. These things are important, of course it's good for you — eat it, but it would be both arrogant and stupid for us to roll out detail after detail and then sneer down our noses at those who choose to be bored. If they're bored they'll go away. Tough luck.

For us,

it's hard to comprehend how something so thrilling — the excitement of holding hands on the street, the joy of being surrounded and supported by people you love and trust, the sheer rush of strength that comes from being out and alive and unfraid — can be made boring. A lot of people in the gay movement are very good at it, nonetheless.

This issue, we tried not to be good at it. Procedural details of the conference have been kept to a minimum; we concentrated instead on analysis of what worked and what didn't — and why. Those involved in the proceedings at Halifax may feel we left important things out of scope so, but what we have tried to emphasize is the strength and vitality of the people who were there.

And that is very much part of the real news. ☐

Letters

Disgusting comics

I was very disgusted with the "comics" in your May issue. Especially the one with the McCar's imitating themselves in a wash room. Why is it that a gay newspaper has to ridicule the Gay Church? Is it because you are so polluted — so far to the left that there is no room for gay christian groups in your paper?

Do you realize that this has resulted in a group in Ontario pulling their ads from your Community Page, as well as cancelling their personal subscriptions to TBP?

I suggest that in the future that you leave out the comics and put in more news from Western Canada.

Charlie Thompson
Husker, AB

In defence of monogamy

OK, out there!!!!

I'm tired of your sly form of bigotry and your sneaky little ways of saying that my form of sexuality (for you seem to want to make it distinct from the blessed state of "gayness") is not worthy of the title "gay." I'm not sure of the roots of your fixation of persecuting monogamous (shudder) homosexuals. I've tried to understand but then I've never been able to understand persecution solely on the basis of sexuality or lifestyle. Perhaps you see us as a danger and are using the press and television as a weapon to fan the fires of discrimination... It's been done before!

So you think that we "carbon copy heterosexual marriages?" So you think "love/drom" is some form of masochistic straightness lashing out at our poor little psyches? We are not that sad and our lifestyle not that sortid. In fact, I think I will check it out with whatever psychiatric association you like you will find that the basis of your antagonism is fear. The stare are all lies, we don't molest, molest non-monogamous types in bars, neither do we wish to convert all your youths and associates into "love/drom" (which I think is the current slur you use).

What can I tell you about us? I do not think there are those of us who have sicko-relationships, but I remind you that there are elements of your own society which is as bad well.

Maybe you can't see us but we are there!!!! We even march with you. Heh heh heh heh this could be fun. We even donate to your cause (a nose, a nose). You'll never be rid of us.

Dave and Joe
Toronto

Up yours, TBP

A veteran (or should I say victim?) of 80's USA struggles, I looked to Canada and TBP for what burned-out USA could no longer provide. Into the burned out place always comes porno-mafia-fascism.

As a child, I had experience with pederasty (Jesus, all your romantic Greek fantasies — as if children were not people but dolls). I'd like to say to me I hadn't had a healthy effect on my life, just as it hasn't helped any of the others — women, "dark races," etc. — who are objectified and merchandized by the male pig, pay or straight. As an adult, I have again met self-declared pederasts and they have never been the radical or revolutionary man you'd like us to be. These men are powerful businessmen, spoiled, unable to relate to someone who might demand give-and-take on an equal basis.

For TBP to become involved in justifying this and similar behavior looks like nothing less than CIA or other police interference within your organization; you can detect the disease by the name of certain staff members who push emphatically issues which divide and dissolve the organization.

Your new body Politix is very slick but too long, expensive to me or for me. Please don't worry about ageism — don't at all mind being "left out." You've managed to keep the sex in homosexual but you've betrayed what little feelings, love, values, respect were beginning to grow for us. In the days previous to "Gay Liberation" (the moralist's word), there was less sanity, but once in a while there was a little human sensitivity among the same-sex-loving brothers and sisters. That sort of sensitivity has been killed and buried by our new brothers in their Nazi drag (the uniform of gay chauvinism). Up yours.

"Gay Liberation" (the moralist's word), but a human being. Thanks for liberating me from your "liberation." I will not make the mistake, of course, of thinking you represent the mass of same-sex lovers — voiceless, as the day has not yet come when power resides with the silent and loving.

To the Happy Few! — whether purple or Jewish.

James Ellis
San Francisco

Pedophile speaks out

I feel that I must speak out. I am not surprised you received so many letters after having published the article on pedophilia in your last issue. (The article was because I am a boy-lover, I know the truth about such relationships. I am very sorry that some gay people feel threatened by homophobia. However it is a fact of life and far more prevalent than society thinks.

I have been having sex with under-age boys all my life. I didn't care much about my fellow pedophiles, doing time in prison. I always assumed that they wouldn't be there if they weren't doing something wrong. That was until I got arrested last July (my first arrest) for "child molestation." In the state of California, anyone convicted of having sex with a person under 18 is automatically declared to be a "mentally disordered sex offender" and "dangerous to the public health and safety."

There is a myth in this society that pedophilia is a mental illness. With the psychological and emotional aspects of a sexual relationship. So few realize that emotional reactions are not the result of pedophilia. That emotions are the result of the way we have been taught to feel about our natural urges. Another myth is that a juvenile and an adult cannot form a meaningful and lasting sexual relationship. In my relationships with boys, I have found that if the relationship is primarily based upon love and affection, and not just upon sex, the relationship can last. But even if it doesn't last long, it can still be fruitful. With me the boys found an outlet for their sexual urge.

They overcome their awkwardness, their bodies and feelings. What I gave my boys was open and honest affection. Often, that affection was returned with equal intensity. When that happened, I saw it enrich both my life and the boy's. Rape is one thing, sex is another! Sexuality is a natural biological urge common to all human beings. What is labelled "normal" and "acceptable" is dependant upon the prevailing beliefs of the society.

My attraction to young boys is a dominant one. I have never felt the need to dominate my sex partner. I have never had any difficulty in forming relationships with adults. I choose boys for their own erotic qualities.

I am willing to speak out now because I have nothing left to lose. I expect to be locked up for at least 3 or 4 years.

I urge all gay and straight people to continue asking questions about pedophilia. Maybe, someday, when we overcome our panic and are able to look at sex more honestly and objectively, we will be able to divorce it from Guilt, Shame, Inhibition, Fear, and Misunderstanding.

Chester Blinner
Drewser "A"
Alhambra, CA 91842

Please don't take me from anyone. Interested in how people doing time for my offence are treated.

Number 45 August 1978

The liberation of homosexuals can only be the work of homosexuals themselves."

Kurt Hiller, 1921.

Literary lynching?

Your article "Getting into Getting Sex" (TBP, June) was arranged as an "interview," but at least you had the honesty to headline it "Michael Lynch talks to author John Lee." Indeed he did: there are 130 lines of print devoted to my statements, and 230 lines to Lynch's so-called "questions."

Of course I knew his article would be unfriendly, but I hardly expected such a low-bid in journalistic integrity. Some of the adjectives are breath-taking in their vituperation. Even less excusable is the transparent use of "questions" to the reader, to make unsupported (and obviously, in my mind, unsupported) allegations, or to draw antagonistic conclusions. Example: "Isn't Getting Sex committed to an ageism... isn't its tone through and through condescending to every kind of gay person... except the hardened, inveterate, voracious." Now that's really laying it on thick, Michael Lynch!

To add insult to injury, Lynch charges me with being evasive in an article in which he has monopolized nearly three thirds of the dialogue! He lays the basis for his charges by, for example, examining the ten-line paragraph ending with the provocative "nature raw in looth and claw" — allows me two lines of reply, and goes on with seven lines of his attack. Some "interview!" Some editing!

Jay Scott in his Globe and Mail review called the book a "good news book, an antidote to the poisonous preoccupation that presents the sexually athletic as neurotic" but apparently the article was not strong enough to neutralize Lynch's venom, which really comes "through and through" in the "tone" of his article. But he can't find the "objective" evidence to support his animus, so he throws up his hands in a helpless gesture — "Lee has an answer for every objection. A lot more answers than I do."

I know TBP isn't enamoured of the gay bar, both and discrete sex-crushing scene (to put it mildly) and I sometimes think the collective woefully out of touch with the constituency you claim to represent (and hopefully lead); but Michael TBP has made some pretensions to editorial and journalistic integrity. May I suggest that you exorcise those you disagree with by using some modicum of temperance and due process, instead of engaging in literary lynching?

John Lee

Toronto

I wish to congratulate John Lee on his fine book, Getting Sex. I agree with Michael Lynch that this book does not describe the entire gay world, but such an expectation is as unrealistic as expecting a single book to describe the entire heterosexual world. It seems we have the highest expectations for those we love most.

Lee does an admirable job of what he sets out to do, namely document the richness of gay sexual experiences. The book is a long overdue antidote to sex repression in our society.

Brian Miller
Edmonton, AB

Michael Lynch replies:

Brian Miller is misled. Getting Sex does not set out to "document the richness of gay sexual experience." It confines itself to one aspect: cruising as done by the North American adult male. Lee does an admirable job of what he does set out to do: promote the roles of "hunter" and "prey."

Getting Sex has 307 pages with 34 lines of text per page. Promoting promiscuity according to the hunter/prey model. It does not give even one page to a critical questioning of this model. It does not consider other ways of defending promiscuity — as does Fag Rag or Charlie Shively or John Rechy. (There's a vast difference, for example, between Rechy's sexhunter, who as a sexual outlaw goes after sex, and Lee's sexhunter, who as a predator goes after prey.)

Lee's book is a massive apology for the status quo of one aspect of the August 1978

ghetto. He wants to extend his system to heterosexuals, without even asking whether the hunter/prey roles won't reinforce the very male/female roles that feminism and the gay movement are challenging.

I'd argue that "journalistic integrity" in the gay press requires us to pose the tough questions, not just to produce puffery. The gay press must try to distinguish the strength and savour of gay liberation from its lies.

Tomatoes and oranges

The article which your collaborator, Ron Dayman, has devoted to one of our publications, Sortir (TBP June/July) deserves a response because it expresses a number of ideas completely outside of literary criticism...

1) Dayman deplores the lack of a Quebec homosexual literature and contrasts our situation with that of English Canadian homosexuals who can profit (I) from the American experience. There is in fact a homosexual literature in Quebec, but it does not express itself in the same way as the American literature. Also, if English Canadians profit from the American movement, Québecois can profit from French research... Dayman does not know much about French contributions to the subject, and consequently he cannot know that the way of thinking is different.

French sources are less concerned with an analysis of events themselves and more with an analysis of the causes... 2) Your critique argues that Sortir is a disappointing effort, too intellectual, directed to an elite. It is true that this book is not a work for the immediate struggle... Culture, the desire to get to the bottom of things, the care for details, has its place in every struggle. In summary, Dayman went over our work to be a tomato and has been disappointed to find out it is an orange...

3) It must be said that Sortir has received here, and mostly from the homosexual milieu, the same type of criticisms. His critique could thus reflect the opinion of a part of the Québecois gay movement. But that does not bother us.

4) The most serious and fundamental point is the insulting tone of Dayman's incoherent article. On the one hand, he complains (falsely, as I have said) about the lack of Francophone and Québécois contributions to homosexual literature, and on the other hand he dumps on what he thinks are the only two available publications. In other words, he participates directly in what which he deplores — the lack of interest publishing houses have in this type of publication...

...In fact, his critique does not give Sortir a chance. It is for the elite, it is intellectual, and in this way judgement is passed... He can condemn the book without any proofs other than his taste, his desires. In fact, Dayman is sexist and racist. Racism because he does not give the Québec intellectual effort the thoughtful and serious analysis which it deserves. As for sexism, look how the male, the macho, the penis browns it: the only grave fault of the book is the lack of material on female homosexuality. But he does not see that, he's too busy brandishing the big stick, like the police and like daddy.

So Sortir is not a perfect book and it is true that its genre is too intellectual. We are not ashamed because, even if the fashion is the cowboy hat and the hard hat, not to mention the ragged jeans and the boots, we think that there is a place for thought in our milieu, without necessarily forming an elite. After all, intellectuals are also workers... We think, quite humbly, that we have added a drop of sand or two to the construction of a homosexual world. But your critic probably does not understand the meaning of that word. It is there, however, and only there, that an intellectual discussion could be started...

Jean Beaulieu
Literary Director
Éditions de l'Aurore
Montréal

(Ed note: This is an edited and translated version of a much longer letter in French which was sent to TBP).

"...you being a lesbian"

News feature by Chris Beachell

For Lyn MacDonald, just being what she is meant getting a separation certificate and her eviction notice — in the same week. But no one in London — least of all her boss — expected her to do anything about it.

Pornography

A TBP Special Report

For Andrea Dworkin it's the new terrorism and must be stopped. For many of our readers, that stand raises the spectre of censorship. The debate heats up — as the government moves to broaden obscenity laws.

Gay USSR

By Angelo Pezzana

How to love a one-man demo with nothing but a towel, a magic marker — and a lot of guts. Walter Bruno translates the diary of the man who braved the KGB in Moscow — and lived to tell about it.

Dyke detective

Chris Beachell interviews Eve Zaremba

A Reason to Kill may be Canada's first dyke detective novel. A look at what a feminist does to the macho world of crime fiction.

In the news

Canada this month

Canada gets a new coalition in Halifax; Bryant lands in Moose Jaw, and the Quebec Human Rights Commission brings down a verdict of guilty. International too — page 9.

Our Image

TBP Review Section

Giggie with Gotham; good gay rage with Robinson; laugh with Lear — all from our look at what's happening on page, stage and screen.

REGULAR DEPARTMENTS

Editorial/Letters.....	22	Ivory Tunnel.....	23
Flaunting It.....	10	Monitor.....	24
New Age.....	14	Classified.....	24
Tapestries.....	22	Community Page.....	31

COLLECTIVE MEMBERS

Rick Bebout, David Gibson, Gerald Hannon, Robin Hardy, Ed Jackson, Kirk Kelly, Tim McCaskell, Gary Ostrom, Keith Sil, Paul Triclope, Merv Walker.

CONTRIBUTORS

Chris Beachell, Don Bell, Gay Bell, Alan Berube, Dan Blair, Liz Bolton, Brian Bourque, Walter Bruno, Alan Buckley, Roger Campbell, Gillian Chase, Susan Cole, Judith Crewe, Doreen, Bruce Evans, Terry Farley, Dworkin, Brian Evans, Terry Farley, Denis Fontaine, Tim Guest, Libby Hopkins, Graham Jackson, Richard Labonté, Linda Lounsbury, Richard Mohr, David Mole, Brian Mossop, Joe McNulty, Ray Olsen, Lawrence O'Toole, Paul Ranton, Paul Pearce, Angelo Pezzana, Ken Popert, Heather Ramsay, Brian Ranton, David Roche, James Shaffer, Billy Sutherland, Jim Tennyson, Robert Tron, Mariana Valverde, James Wilson, Ian Young, Eve Zaremba.

The Body Politic is published (an average) a year by Pink Triangle Press, a non-profit corporation, as a means of building the gay and lesbian community and the growth of gay consciousness. It is the property of Pink Triangle Press. All rights reserved. The Body Politic is published by Pink Triangle Press, a non-profit corporation, as a means of building the gay and lesbian community and the growth of gay consciousness. It is the property of Pink Triangle Press. All rights reserved.

AVAILABLE ON MICROFILM FROM
McGraw-Hill Information Services
300 North Zeeb Road
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48106
Canada 447 295

Copyright © 1978 by Pink Triangle Press
2ND CLASS MAIL REGISTRATION NO. 245
ISSN 0315-3068

NEWS COORDINATORS

Gerald Hannon & Bill Lewis
International News Editors
Tim McCaskell

NEWS CORRESPONDENTS

Robin Hardy (Toronto); Ron Dayman & Stuart Russell (Montreal); John Duggan (Ottawa); Barry Eriksen (Guelph); James Thatcher (London); Elgin Blair (Mississauga); Jim Monk (Windsor); Jeremy Bass (Winnipeg); Bob Anderson (Hamilton); The Education Collective, Gay Community Centre (Saskatoon); Terry Nelson (Regina); Bob Radek & Rosemary Ray (Edmonton); Al Dunning (Vancouver); Robin Metcalfe (Halifax); Maurice Beaulieu (Quebec City); Michael Merrill (San Francisco).

The publication of an advertisement in the Body Politic does not mean that the Collective endorses the advertiser.

The Body Politic gratefully acknowledges an operating grant from the Ontario Arts Council.

PUBLISHED AND PRINTED IN CANADA

Member

Canadian Periodical Publishers Association

Conference votes new structure to Canadian coalition

Delegates rescind 50% lesbian control resolution

HALIFAX — Over two hundred delegates and individuals from more than forty gay organizations across Canada met here June 28 to July 3 for the sixth annual conference of the National Gay Rights Coalition.

Although the five days of workshops and plenaries resulted in major structural changes to the organization, now called the Canadian Lesbian and Gay Rights Coalition (CLGRC), most delegates expressed disappointment, exhaustion and confusion as they struggled through the final turbulent plenary sessions.

"I felt totally frustrated by the whole thing," said Tom Warner, the delegate for the Coalition for Gay Rights in Ontario. "The gay movement is falling on its own sword. Instead of finding areas of agreement, we've only found new areas to disagree in."

The conference had taken as its theme: "Building solidarity against repression," and delegates were almost unanimous in their feeling that this important issue had been avoided.

Most, however, felt it was impossible to fault the host organization — Halifax's Gay Alliance for Equality. The group had prepared an ambitious program of workshops, entertainment and dances — and pulled off the amazing feat of providing simultaneous translation facilities for all major events, a service partly funded by a grant from the Secretary of State.

Robin Metcalfe, conference coordinator along with Georgina Chambers, now feels that the schedule was "overly ambitious — we tried to do everything. We should have chosen priorities and centred on a few important issues. If it had been clear that these meetings were concrete planning sessions, we might have generated a lot less hot air."

Resolutions from the final plenary on Sunday spilled over into the Steering Committee meeting on Monday, and only the brilliant and ruthless timing of Harold Desmarais (Windsor Gay Unity) prevented the final sessions from disintegrating entirely. Though most agreed such a style was necessary under the circumstances, some delegates found the final sessions "alienating and bureaucratic."

Wiesla Kolasińska, a delegate from the Saskatoon Gay Community Centre, resigned from that position in order to speak her mind as an individual. She said that "rules of order, bureaucracy and efficiency" have taken precedence over very real concerns being expressed by lesbians. The CLGRC is not a movement of lesbians and gay men, but a circus on par with the House of Commons.

Kolasińska was referring partly to the defeat of the 50% lesbian control resolution. That issue was one of the hottest at the conference — and its defeat upset many western delegates who felt it was a significant way of ensuring more lesbian participation in the coalition. The question was whether lesbian votes should be prorated to equal 50% of the voting power at the conference. The motion was defeated in 4/Body Politic favour of retaining a "one organization/one vote" procedure. Most delegates — including many of the women — felt that the 50% solution was tokenistic and non-democratic, and that lesbian participation had to come from a real power base.

Clockwise from top: Harvey Hamburg of Toronto and Philip Salmon of Fredericton share a very necessary umbrella; Ralph Lesser and David Maclean of Gay Youth Toronto adopt a wanton position; and Peg McCuaig of Guelph Gay Equality makes the best of being soggy.

The debate over structural changes was also marred by bitterness and a melodramatic "walkout" by After Stonewall delegates and supporters. The group had demanded changes in the coalition which many delegates felt were based on a misunderstanding of what the coalition actually was. Robin Metcalfe of GAE put forward that view during the conference's first workshop — his strongly worded arguments were perceived as a direct attack by many prairie delegates who were supporting the stand for substantial changes in the way the coalition should be organized.

"I feel now that I did things improperly," says Metcalfe. "I should have given the delegates concerned time to look over my views and formulate a response. But I still stand by what I said — the demands expressed by After Stonewall were based on an ignorance of what the coalition had done in the past, and of what the term 'coalition' really means."

One issue that generated little controversy (compared to last year), was the question of self-determination for Quebec. A resolution affirming Quebec's right to self-determination passed handily, and Marcel Pleau, president of the Association pour les droits des gais du Québec, stated that though he had "mixed feelings" about the conference as a whole, he was "very happy that self-determination passed with no opposition. As someone from Quebec, I sensed a very positive feeling both to Quebec and the issue. I hope to see a lot of francophone delegates at next year's conference in Ottawa."

Gay youth were at the conference in greater numbers than ever before — as one delegate put it, "You know you have to take them seriously now because they're getting angry and making demands." The youth sexuality workshop was one of the more enlightening, and the group demanded — and won — the right to have two gay youths on the newly formed executive committee of the CLGRC.

For the first time, the other victims of ageism — older lesbians and gay men — conducted separate workshops on the problems and rewards of getting old and gay. As Elton Blair of Gay Equality Mississauga put it — "Neither the young nor the old were adequately dealt with — but at least we've made a beginning."

There was a march of over 150 on Canada Day in the pouring rain; there were nightly performances of "The Night They Raided Truxx"; there was Jim MacSwain's extraordinary one-man show, "The Bearded Lady"; there were nightly forays to the Turret for dancing and beer; there were the friendly and generous Haligonians.

There was disappointment — the conference did fail to develop its central theme: building solidarity against repression. Bob Cook of Vancouver's Gay Alliance Toward Equality was more hopeful — "any conference at least demonstrates the potential of a movement where we can be going. There's a tendency to impotence — we've been engaged in this for years and haven't reached our goals. What's required is faith in our goals — there's no easy road to liberation. We drew strength from the small but significant gains made by a few, and envision what can be accomplished by the many." □

"We've created a machine for the passing of resolutions. Two years from now, you won't be able to tell us from the NDP."

Focus and fun

Commentary by Gerald Hannon

The 1977 conference delegates in Saskatoon passed about thirty resolutions. In Halifax, delegates were asked to consider over 70 — everything from substantive, controversial resolutions to "apple pie" motions with which everyone could agree — but on which almost everyone felt he or she had something to say.

As one delegate noted, "We've created a machine for the passing of resolutions. Two years from now, you won't be able to tell us from the NDP."

Not a pleasant prospect. In the past, these annual gatherings of gay people from across the country have served both as valuable business sessions, and as exhilarating affirmations of our gayness and the movement that supports and develops it.

Halifax had its successes; had its light moments. But there were fewer of them. And many delegates were compelled to find what humour they could in the sheer gaslightness of endless business sessions, missed lunches, disrupted timetables and lukewarm rhetoric.

What went wrong?

Part of it was organizational — as David Garmaise of Gays of Ottawa put it, "The conference quickly became a procedural and organizational nightmare — people kept losing track of the central issues they came to discuss. We're going to have to find a solution to procedural problems that won't stifle discussion, and will allow us to get down to the real issues."

That kind of problem is fairly easily solved. Delegates can be asked ahead of time to agree on rules of order. Walter Davis of After Stonewall has suggested that each conference should have an elected leadership to whom people with basic problems and questions could turn — and that sounds like a good idea. It would help free the chair, and place the burden of solving technical disputes on more than one person.

The real problems are deeper ones. Though it may sound trivial, conferences should be fun. They should be times when people starved for gay community can wallow in it — they should be times when you can talk gay, act gay, be gay 24 hours a day and every day, from the conference room to the local straight pub that wouldn't dare throw out the 20 rambunctious dykes and faggots that just descended on it. And there should be the chance to bed-hop through all 9 provinces and Quebec. That won't happen if conferences are scheduled as tightly as Halifax's — five days of workshops packed in hour after hour that left delegates bleary-eyed and wanting nothing more than a chance to get eight hours sleep — alone.

There should be more free time — more time for cultural events, more time for wandering, more time for getting together, more time for cruising.

One delegate wondered aloud whether two conferences might be necessary — one that had fun, and one that dealt with issues. That a national co-ordinating body would logically deal with.

That shouldn't be necessary — if a conference does restrict itself to issues that would logically concern a national co-ordinating body. There are a very few such issues: they relate to actions co-ordinated on a national scale and to lobby efforts directed at federal legislation. All other issues are properly the concerns of individual groups — and should be dealt with by those groups. Workshops are the places to exchange information on the way groups and individuals have dealt with things like ageism, sexism, drag, sissyhood and so on. Workshops are the places to exchange tactical advice on how best to advance the struggles of lesbian mothers, of groups lobbying for rights code changes, of gay people working in unions. Delegates should approach the CLGRC only if their deliberations persuade them that a country-wide action is necessary and must be co-ordinated, or if some strategy must be developed to deal with federal legislation.

Clockwise from top left: Frank Smith was attending his first gay conference, and is caught here during the workshop on older gays. That event attracted about half a dozen older gay and a number of interested young people — all of whom were getting older by the minute and glad to hear there was no truth in the tired old claim that "nobody loves you when you're old and gay." Liz Bolton from Montreal is actively involved in the defence of the Truxx accused. "Gay is wet but gay is proud" — the downpour which soaked marchers on Canada Day didn't dampen this man's spirits. See Baker and Rose Stenton from Lesbians of Ottawa Now (LOON) confer during the debate on the 50% lesbian control resolution.

Such a focus would test groups who do not appear to be truly interested in the goals of a co-ordinated national gay effort. And some of those groups were part of the problem at Halifax.

Wages Due Lesbians were part of the problem. Although most people felt they had discredited themselves last year in Saskatoon, they were back this year with an American gay male supporter to lobby for resolutions like: "We oppose sexual coercion — straight or gay."

Such a resolution concedes that Anita Bryant has a point. Such a resolution is necessary, according to Wages Due spokesperson Ellen Agger, because mothers everywhere have a right to be afraid when "a kid on Yonge Street gets murdered by three faggots." When they make statements like that, Wages Due begins to sound suspiciously like Bryant herself.

Such concerns are largely opposed to the interests of the gay community, and come from a group that joined the coalition at the last minute and with no proven history of any contribution to the goals of a national gay rights movement. There should be a means of revoking membership in the coalition — something the soon-to-be-formed executive committee should concern itself with.

Perhaps that won't be necessary. The prospect of such groups finding themselves at a conference where they are forced to address issues of national

Resolution wrap-up

Highlights of decisions made by delegates to the sixth annual gay rights conference in Halifax.

1. The name of the organization has been changed from the National Gay Rights Coalition to the National Lesbian and Gay Rights Coalition — a change reflecting increased political activity by lesbians and Quebécois gays. The new structure calls for an executive committee with two members, one male and one female, from Coalition groups in each of the following regions: BC, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. The location of the co-ordinating office is to be decided each year — for 1978-79 it will remain in Ottawa.

2. Delegates voted to rescind the 50% lesbian control resolution passed last year. What was rejected was the idea of prorating lesbian votes to ensure them 50% voting control. The issue was a troublesome one for all delegates, and there were strong views both for and against this lesbian move. Women who argued that rejection of the motion would be a sign of a lesbian movement with real strength succeeded in winning delegates to their side, however, and the "fifty percent solution" failed.

strategy, and where they can't divert discussion toward their own sectarian concerns, may be enough to convince them simply to stay home.

Clear procedural guidelines, fun, and a light focus on issues proper of concern to a national co-ordinating effort. It's the formula for a successful conference — and a successful Canadian coalition. □

3. Delegates voted to support Quebec's right to self-determination.
4. A Canadian day of protest is to be organized to coincide with the Body Politic trial. The protest will focus on police repression. In Quebec, it will centre around the plight of the accused in the Truxx trial.
5. The conference reaffirmed its stand against any form of obscenity legislation, and acted to make that stand part of its public program.

6. A travel equalization fund is to be set up to assist delegates travelling from distant corners. Priority is to be given to lesbians, Dubucé's lesbians, and gay youth — in that order.

Individuals interested in a complete list of resolutions should contact: CLGRC, Box 2919, Stn D, Ottawa, ON, K1P 5W9. □

Best Bilingual Pun of the Conference Award

WINNER: Edgar Friedenberg
Responding to a speaker who had deplored the developing right wing offensive and one of its less savvy chroniclers, Toronto Sun columnist Claire Hoy, Friedenberg quipped, "If you think Hoy's bad, wait till you see mafiana!"

Guess who the "high risk offenders" are in Ontario prisons.
"Abnormals — homosexuals, rapists and so on": a spokesperson for the Minister of Correctional Services.

Suppressed Commission report made public; gives nod to gay rights

EDMONTON — The Alberta Human Rights Commission has issued a public statement castigating the provincial government for its delay in dealing with the Commission's recommendations for reform of the Alberta Individual Rights Protection Act. In the same press statement, released May 11, Acting Chairperson J.B. Forest confirmed the Commission's strong support for inclusion of "sexual preference" as a major reform of the Act. Forest stated that "the Commission is unequivocal in its belief that society should not, in the fields of employment, housing and services, discriminate against people because of the lifestyles they choose to live, providing the practice of those styles of life does not contravene the law."

With the tabling of the Commission's report in the Legislature in April, and the Human Rights Commission's own press release, the recommendations made to the government almost two years ago have finally become public. For the first time the press and the public know that sexual preference was included along with the grounds of physical characteristics, marital status and source of income as major recommendations of the Commission's report.

Beginning early in 1976, the Alberta Commission heard presentations by public groups dissatisfied with the present human rights legislation contained in the Individual Rights Protection Act (IRPA). The presentations included one by the Gay Alliance Towards Equality (GATE) in Edmonton. GATE prepared a detailed brief arguing for the inclusion of sexual preference in the IRPA. The brief was presented to the Commission and distributed to all Alberta MLAs. In September of 1976, the Commission delivered their report on reform of the IRPA to Premier Lougheed's Conservative government. The government refused to release any of the report's recommendations to the public until the report was tabled in the Legislature. The Commission itself was refused permission to release its own findings.

That the report contained the recommendation for inclusion of sexual preference, however, was leaked at that time to GATE by sympathetic Commission members. Missing the opportunity to publicize the favourable recommendation, GATE itself chose not to release the information for fear of jeopardizing the jobs of the informants within the Commission. Instead, the group concentrated on forcing the Conservative government to introduce and deal with the report as a whole.

Over one and a half years later, in early Spring of this year, the government could delay no longer and finally tabled the report, promising some reform of the IRPA. The Human Rights Commission, however, has learned recently that "only minor changes, if any, will be made and that the major recommendations, as included in the submission to the Minister of Labour in September of 1976, will not be made."

Neil Crawford, Minister of Labour responsible for the Human Rights Commission, has made it clear that he does not support the inclusion of sexual preference in the IRPA. This spring he went on record as stating that "any government that would support sexual preference would be voted out of office."

GATE, meanwhile, has issued a press statement protesting the government's inaction, and plans to send update bulletins to individual MLAs to keep the issue alive. Bob Radke of GATE expressed the group's continuing frustration, "confronting the government" and the Human Rights Commission at this time is like pissing in the wind."

by Bill Lewis □

Canada Day becomes Gay Day in Moose Jaw

MOOSE JAW — While the rest of Canada celebrated July 1st with traditional hoopla, Moose Jaw Saskatchewan was treated to a large dose of gay liberation politics. Two hundred and fifty lesbians, gay men, feminists and human rights supporters rallied to answer Anita Bryant. She was performing in the city, a guest of the Moose Jaw Fellowship for Evangelism, to honour Canada Day and Moose Jaw's diamond jubilee.

The singer was met by a demonstration of over 150 people in what was not only the first gay rights demonstration in Moose Jaw, but one of the few such protests of any sort in the city. In a show of Prairie solidarity, gays from as far away as Calgary, Edmonton, Brandon and Winnipeg journeyed to join in the demonstration.

The protest march was followed by an interfaith celebration and entertainment hosted by one of Canada's newest gay organizations, Moose Jaw Gay Community. The day's events were sponsored by the Saskatchewan Coalition to Answer Anita Bryant. The Coalition was composed of some 30 groups throughout the province and included women's centres, student unions and the Saskatchewan Human Rights Association. Co-ordinating committees set up by Moose Jaw, Regina, and Saskatoon organized public meetings which featured showings of Gay USA, the new feature length film which includes historic footage of early gay rights marches.

Media attention was divided equally between pro and anti-gay rights forces and much coverage centred on Renaissance International, the group which has sponsored many of Bryant's sojourns to Canada. The national TV news on July 1st reported that 5000 turned out to hear the anti-gay evangelist. The local news brought the figure down to 2000, while Brandon's daily paper counted only 900. □

Paper's refusal to accept ad prompts second rights hearing

MONTREAL — The influential daily La Presse has refused to publish a classified advertisement for Jesse Gale of Montreal (JGM — Gay Youth of Montreal) because "we don't accept this kind of ad."

The same ad had been accepted by two other city dailies — Montreal-Matin and The Montreal Star.

The Quebec Human Rights Commission has accepted the complaint filed against La Presse by JGM. The complaint charges that the paper violated the Quebec Human Rights Charter which prohibits discrimination in access to public services on the basis of sexual orientation.

At the present time the Commission is undertaking an investigation.

The ad stated simply: "Gay and under 21? Join Jeunesse Gale de Montréal." It then gave the group's address and phone number.

The Human Rights Commission inquiry is especially important for Montreal's gay and lesbian community since the only the second time that the sexual orientation amendment to the Human Rights Charter has been put to the test.

As an article explained in the current issue of Gaie/Je, the monthly newspaper of the Association pour les Droits des Gaie/Je du Québec, "Gay and lesbian groups must demonstrate against this discriminatory action of La Presse. Now is the time to defend our rights which have been directly attacked by one of the most important papers in Québec."

Readers are therefore urged to immediately send letters of protest to La Presse: Roger Lemelin, Editeur, La Presse, CP 4200, Succ. Place d'Armes, Montreal, Québec.

Copies should be sent to: Commission des Droits de la Personne, 350 rue St-Jacques, Montreal, Québec H2Y 1P5, and Jeunesse Gale de Montréal, CP 753, Succ. M. Montréal, Québec H3G 2M7.

by Stuart Russell □

Two gay youth acquitted on charge

TORONTO — Ralph Lesser and David Maclean, two members of Gay Youth Toronto, were acquitted June 8 of loitering charges laid against them January 13. The two had been arrested at the end of an evening of distributing flyers for an Anti-Bryant march and rally. Provincial Court Judge Hugh Zimmerman concluded that although there was some evidence the pair had been loitering in front of St. Charles Tavern, a Yonge Street gay bar, the Crown had not succeeded in proving that they had in any way obstructed anyone. Obstructing people in a public place is part of the Criminal Code definition of loitering.

Police alleged that Maclean and Lesser had gone into the street and stopped cars. They also claimed that the pair had tripped and fallen in front of passersby on the sidewalk, and harangued them about Anita Bryant.

Under cross-examination by defence counsel Ken Daneson, police admitted that Maclean and Lesser had kept moving all evening with the exception of a brief stop to chat with some gay people.

The judge noted that if what Lesser and Maclean were doing constituted a criminal act, then anyone who met a friend on the street and stopped to chat would also be committing a crime. He was certain that Parliament, in enacting the loitering law, could not have intended this result, and so dismissed the charges.

by Paul Trollope □

Psychs form gay caucus

OTTAWA — A task force on the status of gay and lesbian psychologists has been established by members of the Canadian Psychological Association (CPA).

Seven gay and lesbian psychologists attended the founding meeting of the task force this June during the CPA annual meeting in Ottawa.

"I was called a 'specialist,'" said meeting co-ordinator Gary McDonald, who holds a masters degree in psychology from Brandon University. But he's confident that more gay men and lesbians will join the Association of Gay Psychologists (AGP) from among the 2,300 members of the CPA.

The Canadian AGP is taking its lead from an American association, set up in 1973, which started with fewer than a dozen members and now represents several hundred.

While it works to establish a gay association within the CPA, said McDonald, the task force will also survey Canadian psychologists to determine how many are gay, to identify whether there is anti-gay discrimination within the profession, and to study mechanisms for referring gay patients to gay psychologists. □

Gay prisoners get "special treatment"

TORONTO — According to a spokesperson for Ontario's Minister of Correctional Services, gay men ordered imprisoned in Ontario's correctional system are classified as maximum security risks and put in a special protective unit regardless of whether the "crime" for which they were imprisoned has anything to do with sexuality or sex offences.

John Edward-Evans, head social worker of the maximum security Millbrook Correctional Centre, recently told a public group that "sex offenders and abnormals — homosexuals, rapists and so on" were all classified as high risk offenders and placed in a special solitary confinement wing of the institution.

When TBP contacted the office of the government Corrections Minister for a confirmation of the policy, a spokesperson for Minister Frank Drex responded that "active and passive" homosexuals were classified as maximum security risks whenever they "created disorder within an institution" or whenever their "personal safety" was "endangered by their homosexual acts." It appears as if any openly gay person would be classified as such.

by Paul Trollope □

August 1978

Supreme Court quashes TBP; obscenity trial delayed

OTTAWA — Pink Triangle Press will not be allowed to challenge Ontario Court rulings upholding the legality of the search warrant used to raid TBP's office last December. On June 5, a three-man panel of the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed TBP's application for leave to appeal. No reasons were given for the refusal.

The effect of the refusal is that the highest court in Canada has given legal sanction to the vague, broad and all-encompassing terms of the search warrant which enabled police to remove 12 shipping cases of material from TBP's office following the publication of the article "Men Loving Boys Loving Men" in the December-January issue of the paper.

Pink Triangle Press lawyer Clayton Ruby had argued that in issuing a search warrant a justice of the peace is required to act judicially, and in doing so cannot rely solely on the opinion of the police to the effect that something is immoral or indecent. He argued that the search warrant was too vague in that it did not specify with sufficient particularity the alleged offence in relation to which the search was being made, and that it did not clearly state what materials could be the subject of seizure. The words of the warrant allowed police to conduct a fishing expedition, Ruby said.

The Supreme Court's refusal to hear the case did not come as a surprise. The Court's most forceful and articulate liberal, Chief Justice Bora Laskin, was in dissent in this case. Ruby, a member of the panel hearing the application, Mr. Justice Martland and Mr. Justice Ritchie, who did hear the application, are generally seen as two of the court's ultra-conservatives.

Meanwhile, the police have been successful in obtaining a judge's authorization to retain the seized materials for at least 12 additional months. TBP has been allowed limited access, however, and can obtain copies of essential financial records and seized manuscripts from the police at a fee of 10 cents a page.

by Paul Trollope

TORONTO — The trial of Pink Triangle Press and its three directors, Kenneth Popert, Edward Jackson and Gerald Hannon, has been delayed. The case may not be heard until the first week of January.

The trial, on one charge of possession of obscene material for the purpose of distribution and another charge of using the mails for the transmission of obscene, indecent, immoral or scurrilous material, was to have commenced June 26. However, Crown Attorney Gerald Wylie requested a delay until September because he was getting married during the summer and intended to leave on a honeymoon after the wedding.

It is not yet known whether the Crown will proceed by indictment or by way of summary conviction. On both charges, the prosecution has the choice of proceeding by indictment, involving a preliminary hearing before the trial itself, or summarily, involving a less serious trial procedure, a quicker resolution of the matter and lesser maximum penalties.

Despite two court appearances by the defendants, the new trial date has yet to be set. On both occasions Crown Attorney Wylie failed to show up. □

The Montreal Gazette ran this editorial cartoon after Lorne Rasmowski, newly elected leader of the federal Social Credit Party, vowed to rid the country of homosexuals, abortionists and unscrupulous bankers (TBP, June-July 78).

Meanwhile, the Social Credit Party in the Pope-Danforth area of Toronto has been distributing leaflets which, among other things, pledged "to get the homes off the TV and have their perversions cured." □

Tory Cabinet opposes rights code change says government source

TORONTO — Ontario's Conservative government has confidential research information showing that it would lose more votes than it would gain if it amended the Ontario Human Rights Code to include sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination. The Cabinet has therefore decided not to introduce such an amendment at the present time, TBP has learned.

The provincial Cabinet and a law insiders met privately several times recently to discuss a number of issues concerning government policy and legislative proposals. At one of these meetings it was revealed that a decision had been made not to amend the Code because of the research results, according to a reliable source close to Premier William Davis.

It is well known that governments employ research firms to investigate potential voter reaction to proposed legislation, but it was not previously known that the government had this information on the sexual orientation proposal and that the adverse decision had been made on that basis.

Previously, government sources had indicated that sexual orientation would be included if the Ontario Human Rights Commission's report recommended it. The reason that this is no longer the case, according to our source, is the media-created anti-gay climate in Ontario since the Jacques murder case. Previously, the government believed that it would be generally praised if it amended the Code to include sexual orientation, and that criticism would not be significant. With the advent of an anti-gay backlash, however, the government is said to fear loss of votes in an already tight minority situation if it introduced the amendment. A member-by-member basis, the cabinet is known to be divided on the issue, but apparently the possibility of lost votes has taken precedence over principle.

by Paul Trollope

Sociologists' association takes gay rights stand, calls for dropping of charges against TBP

LONDON — The Canadian Sociology and Anthropology Association (CSAA) has taken a strong stand in favour of gay rights, and called on the Attorney General of Ontario to drop charges against The Body Politic.

The group says it has become the first professional academic group in Canada to support the civil rights of homosexuals.

Delegates to the annual general meeting of the association voted unanimously May 31 to pass a 10-point resolution sponsored by Barry Adam, John Lee, Stephen Murray, Jim Turk and Lucille Coveille.

Among other things, the resolution called for the "inclusion of the term sexual orientation as an anti-discrimination provision in the Human Rights Codes of each province (with the exception of Quebec which already has done so) and in the Canadian Bill of Rights."

The CSAA also called for its own discrimination within its own ranks, and pledged itself to oppose "efforts to discriminate the civil rights of homosexuals through the distortion or falsification of sociological or anthropological concepts and research."

Three of the recommendations of the resolution related to The Body Politic case. The group voted to call on Attorney General Roy McMurtry to return all material seized during the raid on the paper's office, to destroy all copies of files, letters and subscription lists made by the police, and to drop "the fatuous charge of 'obscenity' laid against members of the editorial collective."

"We're very pleased that the association has taken this stand," said Gerald Hannon of TBP. "It's a strongly worded demand and it's going to make our defence more credible yet."

The CSAA represents about a thousand sociologists and anthropologists from across Canada. □

Commission admits gay rights key issue

OTTAWA — Despite continuing opposition from many Conservative, Liberal and Creditiste members of Parliament, the Canadian Human Rights Commission has taken a strong first step toward pressing for an amendment to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

In its first annual report, the Commission indicates in no uncertain terms that "the fact that sexual orientation is not included among the proscribed grounds of discrimination" continues to "arouse criticism of the legislation."

The Commission notes the sexual orientation issue as one of three key issues with which it is concerned, the other two being rights for native women and equal pay for work of equal value. Furthermore, the Commission says that it is going to "undertake research so that it may be in a position to make a recommendation to Parliament about this issue in its second annual report." □

Library strike vote: gay rights at issue

TORONTO — The Toronto Library Board, which administers Toronto's new $30 million dollar Central Reference Library, is faced with possible strike action by one of the two union locals representing workers at the facility. The local has been without a contract since the beginning of the year.

Demands for flexible working hours, guaranteed placement elsewhere in the system for members displaced by technological change, and the sexual orientation demand were outstanding issues that prompted local 1582's strike vote. Management claimed agreement in principle with all three demands, but refused to include any of them in the contract. They offered instead "letters of intent" which do not permit union members to file official grievances over violations.

Regarding the sexual orientation clause, Rob Laycock, gay activist and CUPE 1582 vice-president, explained: "Management has said that they're afraid to set a precedent. That's a pretty weak argument considering that both other major library boards in Toronto, University of Toronto and Toronto Public Libraries, already have such clauses. There have been rumours that board members have threatened to resign if we win this demand."

Laycock pointed out that "Libraries are one of the fields where gay women and men are traditionally employed. Our local has a long and feminist tradition, for instance. Many of us at Metro Central are openly gay. Management's strong resistance can't help but make us wonder."

by Chris Bearchell

Proposed constitution criticized by NGRC

OTTAWA — The National Gay Rights Coalition has condemned Prime Minister Trudeau's draft bill on a new constitution. The bill includes a provision for a Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, but does not include "sexual orientation" among the prohibited categories of discrimination.

As proposed, the bill would be discrimination on the basis of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, language or age. In a statement issued June 21, the Coalition condemned "the failure of the Prime Minister to provide human rights for homosexual Canadians."

John Duggan, spokesman for the Coalition, went on to say that "Mr. Trudeau's omission is short-sighted and ignores the social changes of the past decade. An increasing number of homosexual Canadians are living openly as gays, and thus need legal protection from discrimination to ensure the same opportunities in employment that other Canadians enjoy."

He also noted that a majority of Canadians support such a change, according to a Gallup Poll made public last year.

"As well," said Duggan, "Trudeau's own party has adopted a resolution calling for any future or revised constitution to guarantee rights and freedoms to gay Canadians. He's just ignored it completely."

Canada is unique among western democracies in that it does not have the power to alter its constitution. That document, called the British North America Act, was passed by the British Parliament and still resides at Westminster. The Canadian provinces have been unable to agree on a formula for its repatriation. □

Body Politic/7

The Toronto Sun would like you to be a "decent homosexual." Watch out. The decent homosexual is a fool.

Catholic school commission found guilty in first case under new law

MONTREAL — The refusal of the Commission des Écoles Catholiques de Montréal (CECM — Montreal Catholic School Commission) to rent its facilities to a gay rights group constitutes a discriminatory act and an attack against both freedom of assembly and free expression guaranteed by the Quebec Human Rights Charter.

This was the final conclusion of an inquiry report released in June by the Quebec Human Rights Commission. The organization was investigating a complaint filed last April by the Association pour les Droits des Gais et des Lesbien(ne)s (ADGG).

It was the first time that the Commission had investigated a complaint charging discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

Last April the CECM refused to rent the Cardinal Newman School hall to ADGG to hold an orientation conference. The school commission took the action, "fearing the possible repercussions on the education of the CECM's children," (TBP, May 1978).

In its examination of the case, the Human Rights Commission rejected the allegations of the CECM. They concluded that catholicism condemns not homosexuals but rather homosexual acts. At no time did the CECM explain that such acts might occur during the conference with the alleged "negative repercussions" on "its" children.

The Human Rights Commission therefore found the CECM in violation of sections 10 and 12 of the Human Rights Charter. Its next step will be to formulate specific recommendations to the CECM.

by Stuart Russell □

Marchers surge past police headquarters in Montreal

Two hundred march to protest repression

MONTREAL — About 200 enthusiastic lesbians and gay men marched through the streets of Montreal June 17 to protest ongoing repression and discrimination against this city's gay community.

The demonstration was called in response to several concrete cases of repression and discrimination. The Montreal Catholic School Commission has refused to rent its facilities to the Association pour les Droits des Gais et des Lesbien(ne)s (ADGG); the Montreal "profile" group denounced the adoption of Bill 66 (adding "sexual orientation") to the Quebec Human Rights Charter; anti-gay police harassment continues; and the Trux trials had just begun.

One of the highlights of the protest was the impressive participation of women — about half the demonstration marched in the lesbian contingent called for Gae Femmes. Under the banner "Lesbians, we're suffocating under our masks," several women wore brown paper bags while others took part in a spirited musical band.

The militant and festive mood of the demonstrators was reflected in the slogans: "Down with police repression," "Gays, lesbians, into the streets — it's only a beginning," "Drop the charges against the Trux accused," and "Gays, women, lesbians, unite — same enemy, same fight."

These were only some of the many slogans chanted as the march filed by the Main Police Headquarters and City Hall on its way to a rally at Viger Square in east-end Montreal.

Speakers at the rally included Marcel Pleau for ADGG, Mark Wilson for the Comité de Soutien aux Accusés de la Trux (Support Committee for the Trux Accused), and several lesbians including writer Jeanne-d'Arc Jutras. A message of solidarity from the Canadian Lesbian and Gay Rights Coalition was also read.

by Stuart Russell □

New rights group adopts gay concerns

WINNIPEG — The newly constituted Manitoba Association for Rights and Liberties has formed a committee on sexual orientation. The organization was formed early this year in Winnipeg by an ad hoc group of individuals concerned with civil rights. It sees its role as that of a watchdog on the enforcement of the present Manitoba Human Rights Act by the Human Rights Commission, and as a lobbying group to recommend reform of the present legislation.

The Sexual Orientation Committee held their first meeting early in June and adopted a wide-ranging list of priorities. The group has elected to push for inclusion of sexual orientation in the Human Rights Act, for the discounting of sexual orientation as a factor in child custody cases, for an end to discrimination against gay women and men in the Armed Forces and an end to police harassment of gays.

Pam Packham, a social worker, and Chris Vogel, a Manitoba government employee, were elected co-chairpersons of the Committee. Vogel has indicated that the Committee is hopeful they can influence reform of the Manitoba Human Rights Act. □

Arts Council split over TBP grant

Secretary resigns over issue

TORONTO — Events surrounding an Ontario Arts Council decision to reserve judgement on TBP's grant application has prompted the resignation of one of the Council's employees.

Karsten Kossman, secretary to Film and Literary Officer Steve Stanovick, resigned June 29 to protest the way Council has handled TBP's application. In a statement to TBP, he said "I've resigned over the general attitude of Council over the last six months since the day on your office. At the moment I can't be too specific — but something that happened during the June Council meeting finally made up my mind. It wasn't the deferment — that has happened before. But I'm not at liberty to discuss what did happen."

When grant awards were announced at the end of June, no mention was made of TBP's grant application. The paper has since been informed that Council had reserved judgement until its September sitting. No reason was given for the delay.

Literary officer Stanovick has told TBP that such delays occur from time to time when Council feels it needs more information, when the circumstances of the publication might change, or for a variety of other reasons.

"Council won't know anything in September that it doesn't know now," said TBP collective member Gerald Hannon. "This looks like an attempt to postpone a decision until the heat's off. But Council's naive if they think a two-month wait will make any difference."

"Kossman's resignation leads me to suspect that some things I've felt about the Arts Council may be true," continued Hannon. "That there may be an anti-gay bias at work there, and that they are by no means immune to political pressure. I don't know how else to explain the shameful way we've been treated in our dealings with Council lately."

He noted that there had been no reply from Council to the paper's protest at being dropped from the Experience '78 program. "The Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association has protested on our behalf, and they have heard nothing either," he added. "They accused the OAC of finding us guilty before the courts have — and I think that's what has happened."

"The real test will come in September. We've heard rumours of other resignations pending if TBP isn't awarded a grant."

TBP had applied this year for a grant of over $8000. □

Supreme Court delays Tide case

OTTAWA — The Supreme Court of Canada has postponed until next autumn hearing an appeal on what has been called its "first gay rights case."

The court has been expected to hear the case during the week of June 12. However, a spokesperson explained June 16 that overcrowding on the court's list had forced the delay.

The appeal is being brought by the Gay Alliance Toward Equality in Vancouver. The group is appealing a British Columbia Court of Appeal ruling that upheld the Vancouver Sun's refusal to carry an advertisement for its paper, Gay Tide. □

WARNING

TBP has learned that Metro Toronto Police are ordering using plain clothes cops to make arrests in Winston Churchill Park. Gays cruising in Toronto park areas should take precautions against being entrapped. □

Decent homosexuals

An analysis by Ken Popert

The Toronto Sun's editorial page is the last place you'd expect to find references to "decent homosexuals." And yet, that very phrase has appeared there several times during the past year, a year in which the tabloid's owners have made much capital (literally) from the exploitation of fear and ignorance about gay people.

But this is no inconsistency in editorial policy; the decent homosexual is a fundamental element in the Sun's ideological war against homosexuals-liberation.

"In the Emmanuel Jacques case it is not 'decent' homosexuals who should feel threatened, but the depraved ones who give homosexuality a bad name and who seem anxious to join recruits, create a new 'normality,' and who thrive for political power." So wrote Sun editor Peter Worthington last August 16. (Don't be confused by Worthington's quotation marks — he uses them with the precision of a good queen applying facial taffy. They mean nothing in particular.)

This thoughtful analysis of gay activists as "depraved homosexuals" was later refined in an editorial (March 23) which characterized us as "dingbats and creeps."

And there is the Sun's darling, the decent homosexual: "the doesn't flaunt his abnormality, he doesn't proselytize, he seems a conscientious parent, is discreet and maintains privacy in matters that, heterosexual or homosexual, are essentially personal matters." (editorial, March 23).

The message, then, is that the Sun's antihomosexual campaign is not aimed at discreet homosexuals, but at the "depraved homosexuals" (read: "gay activists") who "thrive for political power" (read: "seek equality in employment and housing").

The political significance of this stance is obvious. The decent homosexual is a closeted homosexual whose dearest wish in life is to escape detection; he could go through life unnoticed, unmentioned and unmentioned by any gay activists would stop making such a fuss; and therefore he should stay away from those who claim to be fighting for his rights.

This truce proposed by the right wing over the heads of the gay movement, as it were, is probably convincing to some of the closeted. But the truce is offered with an utter lack of sincerity.

Consider what happened to two non-militant men who had the bad luck to be minor figures in a story which drew the Sun's attention earlier this year.

The two men were living together in a cottage near Windsor. Last September, four men — one of them armed — and women appeared at the cottage. Inside, the four men proceeded to sexually abuse the women. First they bludgeoned her to death.

One occupant of the cottage came forward as a witness at the trial which was held over a period of two weeks. True to its morbid editorial policies, the Sun paid great attention to this trial, publishing almost daily reports.

As you might expect, the witness, a "heterosexual" was never used in connection with the four sadistic rapists and murderers. But someone else's sexuality was dwelt upon. Sun reporters Jan Louder and Debbie Reed were careful to name not just the witness, but also his lover and to identify them as homosexuals. One of the stories was written in such a way that the casual reader could easily have gained the impression that the two gay men were accomplices in the crime.

The decent homosexual, finally, is an unprovoked homosexual who is told homosexual, a defenceless homosexual. He is dependent upon the capricious benevolence of the political right for his well-being. The decent homosexual is a fool. □

THE WORLD

Police attack gay solidarity march

A peaceful Mardi Gras celebrating International Homosexual Solidarity Day was attacked by police Saturday June 24 in Sydney, Australia.

The military style attack came without warning after the police had confiscated the public address system. The organizers were therefore prevented from asking the crowd of 2000 to disperse. None of the attacking officers wore their identification badges.

Twenty-three women and thirty men were detained and fingerprinted. They were held from 6 to 10 hours before being informed of charges against them. The 23 women were held for 4 hours in a cell designed for 2 occupants. One man was beaten unconscious and was not allowed medical attention until five hours later.

After the attack those not arrested regrouped and proceeded en masse to the Darlinghurst police station where they remained until morning, singing and chanting in support of those detained inside.

Lawyers and doctors who attempted to enter the station to see clients and injured were threatened by police with charges of trespass and denied access.

The following Monday, police officers without court authorization and sometimes without proper identification prevented people, including several of those charged, from entering the court dealing with the cases.

The Australian National Times called

Sydney police prevent gays from entering the courts.

the incident "the most serious...since Wan's Government took office."

Referring to police action outside the courtrooms, the paper concluded "It is not just a question of homosexual rights, not only a question of civil liberties and the abuse of police procedure. Last Monday for a few hours the police appeared to be contesting the authority of the courts."

The Gay Solidarity Group (GPO Box 5074 Sydney 2001) is asking that letters and telegrams be sent to Nevill Wran (Premier of New South Wales) and Frank Walker (Attorney General), Parliament House, Sydney NSW, Australia 200, requesting a public inquiry into the police violence, and an investigation into the removal of police identification badges. The GSG is also demanding that all charges be dropped and that all police officers involved in the attack be suspended. Gay groups from across Australia and around the world are rallying to the defense of those charged.

TB strongly recommends that Canadian and American groups make their protest known. □

Briggs on November ballot, gay resistance mounts

Organizations opposing the Briggs Initiative are springing up across California.

The initiative, which calls for the firing of gay teachers or any teachers in the State who support gay rights, has qualified for a plebiscite in this year's November election.

Already the American Civil Liberties Union, the California Federation of Teachers and The Metropolitan Community Church have launched lawsuits to remove the measure from the ballot.

At a meeting kicking off the campaign of the Bay Area Committee Against the Briggs Initiative, San Francisco City Supervisor Harvey Milk demanded that the Carter administration take a stand to defend gay civil rights.

State Governor Jerry Brown, San Francisco Mayor George Moscone and a number of California's labour unions have promised to actively campaign on behalf of gay teachers.

Folk singer Joan Baez was among several performers to sing at a "Stop Briggs Concert" in Santa Monica June 7 — the first anniversary of the Dade County defeat. Frank Vel, a long time gay activist, has announced a 1200 mile walk across the state to publicize the campaign against the anti-gay proposal.

Supervisor Milk and San Francisco State University professor Sally Gearhart have formed a "Fund to Defeat the Briggs Initiative." The fund will distribute money to the many smaller local campaigns across the state.

The financial report which Briggs was required to issue after withdrawing from the State's Republican gubernatorial primaries throws light on the sources of his support. A number of large banking interests (including the Chartered Bank of London), one of the largest gas companies, and the Atlantic Richfield Company have all given large donations to his campaign. □

100,000 march for ERA

In Washington's largest demonstration since the Viet Nam War, over 100,000 women, children and men marched July 9 in celebration of a seven year extension of the March 1979 deadline for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA).

The ERA, which will amend the American Constitution to make discrimination against women illegal, has already been approved by Congress. Thirty-eight of the fifty states must ratify the change in order for it to become law. So far thirty five States have given their ratification. Women's movement leaders fear that if three more states do not express their support before March the measure will die.

Rallies in support of the extension of the deadline were held in cities across the US. □

Israeli lesbians confront women's movement

Israeli lesbians confronted the country's feminist movement at a Women's Conference in Be'er Sheva on May 1. Twenty members of Israel's new Lesbian Feminist Movement stood to support a statement demanding the recognition of lesbians within the country's growing women's movement.

The Israeli women's movement was originally born as an American immigrant group who refused to accept the degraded position of women in the country. It has recently been receiving growing support from native born "sabras" and women coming to Israel from African and Moslem countries. □

Greeks fight "acts against nature" law

The Greek Gay Liberation Movement (AKOE) has taken up the struggle against a new anti-gay law soon to be introduced into the Greek Parliament by a right wing representative. The proposed law was first considered during the military dictatorship several years ago but the generals were overthrown before the measure could be put into effect.

The law would make the transmission of venereal disease a criminal offense and links homosexuality with VD. It proposes prison terms of up to one year for anyone who in a public place "displays the evident intention of attracting other men to commit acts against nature."

An AKOE petition denouncing the proposed law has been signed by such prominent European intellectuals as Simone de Beauvoir, Maria Antonietta Macciocchi, Nikos Poulantzas, Jean-Paul Sartre, Louis Althusser, and filmmaker Costa Gavras. □

French psych banned

A child psychiatrist on the French island La Reunion has been forbidden to practice for six months by the French National Physician's Council. He had been accused of having homosexual relations with adolescent boys.

L'Ordre des Médecins claims that Dr André Buisson exhibits "deep tendencies incompatible with medical ethics."

Buisson has received support from fellow doctors, social workers and the general public on the island, and a petition is presently being circulated against the Council's draconian action. On June 20 the Health Action Movement, The French Psychiatric Union, The French General Practitioner's Centre, The Paris Gay Information Centre (ALPH), and the Paris Gay Liberation Movement, co-sponsored a public meeting in Paris on the doctor's behalf.

Buisson himself is refusing to accept the Council's ban and has continued to work since his suspension on April 1. □

WHO's sick

Gay groups from Finland, Sweden, Denmark and Norway met in Stockholm June 3 to discuss ways to have homosexuality removed from the International Classification of Diseases list put out by the World Health Organization (WHO).

WHO is planning to revise its disease list in 1988. Homosexuality is presently listed as disease number 302.5.

Presbyterians vote no

After a long debate, the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church (USA) meeting in San Diego voted May 22 to disapprove of the ordination of "Self affirming, practicing, homosexual persons," while supporting civil and human rights for gay men and lesbians.

The policy statement does not exclude gays from membership and leaves the final decision on ordination up to local presbyteries. The issue had split the church since last January when a commissioned report on homosexuality came out in favour of the ordination of gays. □

Eurocourt hears 2nd case

The European Commission of Human Rights has agreed to hear a second case which will challenge anti-gay laws in England and Wales.

Peter Weiss, a south English businessman, was sentenced to 1 1/2 years in prison in 1974 for engaging in sex with two 18-year-old men, one of whom is still his lover.

Weiss is claiming that his prosecution and imprisonment violated three articles of the European Convention on Human Rights to which the UK is a signatory.

In March the Strasbourg court also agreed to hear the case of a Belfast man who is challenging the Northern Ireland laws against any kind of homosexual relations. Both cases are expected to be heard later this year. □

Fascists hit second gay bar

A second English gay bar has been attacked by National Front members, an anti-gay fascist organization.

The Fenton Hotel in Leicester is frequented by gays after local Gay Liberation Front meetings on Tuesday nights. On May 23 between fifteen and twenty fascists in para-military uniform forced their way into the crowded bar and began throwing glasses. Although police were called immediately, they did not arrive until well after the gang had left. No arrests were made.

One gay man may lose the sight in his right eye and several other men and women were treated for cuts and bruises.

Seven National Front members were identified among the attackers and the Leeds Chapter of the Anti-Nazi League is pressing the police for their arrest. The Front had trashed a well known London bar in January. □

Huge demos mark

Gay Pride USA

Hundreds of thousands of lesbians, gay men and supporters marched June 25 in Gay Pride demonstrations in different US cities.

In San Francisco 300,000 people turned out to hear City Supervisor Harvey Milk demand that President Carter appear out on behalf of human rights.

In New York 85,000 marched up Fifth Ave and demanded that the Lesbian and Gay Rights Bill be passed in City Council. Over 50 groups representing a wide spectrum of activist, social, service, religious, and professional organizations took part in the march. June 18 to 25 had previously been declared "Gay and Lesbian Pride Week" by New York Mayor Edward Koch.

Rallies in Houston and Chicago drew three thousand demonstrators each, while five thousand marched in Boston June 17. □

NZC bans "Glad to be gay"

Radio New Zealand, part of the New Zealand Broadcasting Corporation, has banned the Tom Robinson Band song "Glad to Be Gay." Robinson's band considered one of the most important of the new wave of British rock groups, features hard hitting protest, anti-fascist, and anti-racist lyrics.

The Wellington Gay Liberation Group has denounced the ban as "blatant and unjustifiable discrimination against New Zealand's gay community."

Other radio stations not connected with the national network have been giving the TRB song a good deal of air play. □

Bryant loses bid for church post

Anita Bryant's hopes for an official position in the Southern Baptist Convention were dashed June 12 when her nomination for the vice-presidency was defeated two to one at the church's pastoral conference in Atlanta. Bryant had urged pastors to take a stand against "immorality" and warned that fundamentalist Christians would be punished if they fail to take an outspoken stand on behalf of their moral values. The church is the largest protestant denomination in the USA and counts President Jimmy Carter as one of its members.

Anita Bryant's address to the conference was met by a demonstration of 4000 gays. Atlanta's gay community is said to be the third largest in the USA. The single Judge Queen did come out tops in another vote however, 800 students polled in Florida, Colorado, Indiana, Missouri and New York named Anita Bryant and Adolf Hitler as the man and woman who have done the most damage in the world in the same poll, conducted by Ladies Home Journal, she was teamed with Richard Nixon as the two who make students "angriest". □

Ontario Registration no. 1447969

G & J Travel Catering to your lifestyle for over 2 years.
206 Wellesley St. E., Toronto. Call 921-1101

San Juan FLORIDA New York Provincetown weekends

SAN FRANCISCO

Wherever...

We thank you for your continued support.

B

BECCARS BANQUET

LUNCH:
Daily Soups
Hot Entrees
Salads, Desserts

DINNER:
Daily Soups
Hot Entrees
Salads, Desserts

BRUNCH:
Elegant Eggs
Fresh Baked Bread
& Pastries

325 QUEEN WEST AT BEVERLEY, TORONTO. 366-4147

Thank you
for your support.
But it's not over yet.

Supporters of The Body Politic Free the Press Fund have so far donated over $23,000* in defence of the gay press. This help has made it possible for The Body Politic to fight its case in the courts without tying up the operating funds necessary to keep the paper publishing.

But we still have a long way to go. The trial is yet to come — it's now scheduled for January 1979 — and legal costs will continue to mount. The total bill will probably come to $30,000.

Nonetheless, we're confident that the Fund will reach that mark — because we know we can count on your help. Together, we're going to win this battle.

Thanks once again for your support.
Both past and future.

THE BODY POLITIC FREE THE PRESS FUND

c/o Cornish, King, Sachs + Weinman
Barristers + Solicitors
111 Richmond Street West
Suite 200
Toronto, Ontario
CANADA M5H 3N6

Cheques payable to:
Lynn King in Trust
for The Body Politic
Free The Press Fund
Information: (416) 863-6320

*Financial statements are available on request. Ask us to put you on our mailing list.

"If we don't strengthen the family unit, we can expect the imminent destruction of our civilization as we know it." A standard verse in every right wing bigot's hymn. Who am I to argue?

My first experience of child abuse was fairly normal. It was the sting and ringing ears from being hit hard across the face, often without knowing why. Makes a man of you, they say. My second experience of child abuse was in the opposite sense. In junior high school we had two English teachers who, I realize now, were Gay and were lovers. At the time I knew only that they were "fairies." Both were effeminate and neither attempted to hide it. I suppose you could say they flaunted it, in a pastelle sort of way. An all-boy class (ah!), we ran a permanent open season on the two of them. They were free game for any abuse we could invent — and we were grotesquely inventive. We competed vigorously among ourselves to see who could get away with the worst, who could be the most imaginatively cruel. I'm fairly sure from this distance that I won, regularly and hands down. One of the two men lost his temper one day and threw a bible at me (we were studying the trials of Job); that moment may have been the zenith of my popularity in high school.

One of the finest publications I've ever seen by or about Gay people, Growing Up Gay, a pamphlet from FFS: A Magazine of Lesbian, Gay, and Transsexual Erotica, quotes one Bobby Gratz on his school years: "I would always hear picked up by men who wanted to have sex with them. They always seemed disgusted that men would want this of them. I had fantasies about being picked up by homosexuals but it never happened to me. I was very disappointed because the only way I could get my sexual needs met was through someone else's initiation. I was too frightened by others' reactions if I were to make the first move." Can you imagine the average "adult" reaction to this? He's just a child, he doesn't know what he wants. It's our responsibility to protect him."

Big Brothers is a large international organization devoted to reaching "fatherless boys before irreparable damage is done." To help them "develop a way of living that is personally and socially adequate." These saviours of youth ran a series of seminars on how to keep out of this admirable but delicate process. (We know because we broke in on and made a bit of a hash of one of the sessions.) The executive director of B.B. crowed: "Of course I wouldn't hesitate to impose my sexual orientation on any child in my care." He was, he hastened to point out, referring to the heterosexual orientation. A psychiatrist hired to address the group heartily approved of physical punishment as a valid means by which "the child can come to know the limits of acceptable behaviour."

A Gay social worker at the same seminar (what you might call a verifiably out Gay person) stressed in private conversation the importance of separating "personal feelings" from "professional standards." (Translation: I want to keep my job, don't I.) He recounted this story: "A boy 'in care' asked me if I slept with men. (Brevé question.) I asked myself: what is he really asking? (Whether you sleep with men. The answer is yes.) Is he really asking for approval for him to sleep with men? (No, he's probably asking for approval to have sex with or make love to men. But why don't you just ask him what he wants, instead of guessing?)" Since I don't believe a significant person in a child's development should offer a positive personal example (you didn't listen to the above executive director?), I told him he should experiment if he wanted to (preferably in a clinic), but always with love and caring." Adrift in an ocean of "no's", this was as close to being thrown a saving "yes" as that young person "in care" could get, and he had to work for it. He was, relatively speaking, one of the lucky ones; loving your fellow man/woman is not among the values B.B. preaches for becoming "personally and socially adequate."

Child abuse

GL (initials changed mostly to protect the guilty) introduced herself to her parents as a Lesbian at age 17, four years before she was legal. They reacted quite simply: they threw her out of her home — what are parents for, after all? (She tells this with an astonishing lack of bitterness, as far as I can tell.) She has been supporting herself ever since, and sharing mutual life support with other Lesbians. She was invited to come home for a visit. Mother suddenly erupted, "What I can't understand is what you people do in bed." When she began to explain, any good daughter would, Mother threw a plate of hot baked beans straight at her head. Father looked gloomy, presumably regretting the loss of his son, when G was departing. Mother called after her plaintively, "Why don't you come and see us more often, dear?"

When you reach a certain age, since her father's neither of these people has ever really carried her, but now it seems GL is required to carry them, both. Claire Hoy, Toronto call columnist (pun intended), check your Oxford or Webster, Claire) and crusader to protect children from their sexuality, finally came out, if you'll pardon the expression, on the subject of child abuse. He called an Ontario government report suggesting closer attention by teachers, doctors, etc. to child abuse "one more cruel con on an unsuspecting public," which threatened to "wantonly cast aside the traditional rights of privacy and parenthood." Heaven forbid. There is, he said, "absolutely no evidence to suggest child abuse is more serious than it has been in the past." And in the past it was perfectly fine, wasn't it. It made our country what it was, strong and free. The same paper he writes for carries the story of a 19-month-old baby battered to death. The child had been taken previously from her parents, then returned to their custody despite a police officer's prediction that she wouldn't live three months if returned to them. Her paper also carries ads for the movies Teen-age Jail-bait and Prison Babies — The True Story of Teenage Girls in Prison, in erotic colour. Claire Hoy, Toronto Sun, protector of children.

Ontario recorded 770 cases of child abuse in 1976 but it is estimated — as in every other province — that records merely reflect a fraction of the total. This from a less than ideal source, that of Betty Lee writing in The Canadian Magazine. "Any public health nurse, children's aid society staffer or hospital emergency ward intern can supply the stark details: the rape, mutilation, battering of children by a father or a mother. The cases of torture and imprisonment. The erosion of the family by fear and then family violence that drives so many children into mental collapse, even suicide. Children, after all, are still regarded as chattels."

Is the National Gay Task Force still behind the slogan "We are not children."? Are we so sure we want to be?

By Michael Rlordon □

PORNOGRAPHY

THE NEW TERRORISM?

For Andrea Dworkin, there is no question. For many others, suppression of erotic material can bring only guilt and government censorship.

The April issue of The Body Politic carried a news story about the report on pornography which had recently been tabled in the House of Commons. The issue also featured an analysis by Gerald Hannon which argued strongly against any legislation which would restrict the use or distribution of pornography. The piece was particularly critical of two Canadian feminists, Lorraine Clark and Debra Lewis. Both had appeared before the Justice Committee, both had argued for a new kind of legislation. Neither were offended by explicitly sexual publications per se, both wanted legislation to prohibit material "involving the use or threat of violence as a means of achieving sexual gratification, or material involving an inappropriate object of sexual gratification."

Hannon argued that "obscenity laws are laws without content...they exist to be used for political purposes only, to harass unpopular groups and censor divergent opinion."

Not everyone agreed. We filled this feature: "Pornography — The New Terrorism?" For Andrea Dworkin, the answer is a resounding yes — the piece she sent us had the same title — without the question mark. It starts below.

Not everyone was so certain. The issue has troubled the collective, and it is clear that many of our readers are struggling with some of the same problems. We have received many letters on the topic — a selection appears on the following pages.

All through human history, there have been terrible, cruel wrongs. These wrongs were not committed on a small scale. These wrongs were not rarities or oddities. These wrongs have raged over the earth like wind-swept fires, maiming, destroying, leaving humans turned to ash. Slavery, rape, torture, extermination have been the substance of life for billions of human beings since the beginning of patriarchal time. Some have batted on atrocity while others have suffered from it until they died.

In any given time, most people have accepted the cruelest wrongs as right. Whether through indifference, ignorance, or brutality, most people, oppressor and oppressed, have apologized for atrocity, defended it, justified it, excused it, laughed at, or ignored it.

The oppressor, the one who perpetrates the wrongs for his own pleasure or profit, is the master inventor of justification. He is the magician who, out of thin air, fabricates wondrous, imposing, seemingly irrefutable intellectual reasons which explain why one group must be degraded at the hands of another. He is the conjurer who takes the smoking ash of real death and turns it into stories, poems, pictures which celebrate degradation as life's central truth. He is the illusionist who paints mutilated bodies in chains on the interior canvas of the imagination so that, asleep or awake, we can only hallucinate indignity and outrage. He is the manipulator of psychological reality, the framer of law, the engineer of social necessity, the architect of perception and being.

The oppressed are encapsulated by the culture, laws, and values of the oppressor. Their behaviours are controlled by laws and traditions based on their presumed inferiority. They are, as a matter of course, called abusive names, presumed to have low or disgusting personal and collective traits. They are always subject to sanctioned assault. They are surrounded on every side by images and echoes of their own worthlessness. Involuntarily, unconsciously, not knowing anything else, they have branded into them, burned into their brains, a festering self-hatred, a virulent self-contempt. They have turned out of them the militant dignity on which all self-respect is based.

Oppressed people are not subjugated or controlled by dim warnings or vague threats of harm. Their chains are not made of shadows. Oppressed people are terrorized — by raw violence, real violence, unspeakable and pervasive violence. Their bodies are assaulted and disfigured, according to the will of the oppressor.

This violence is always accompanied by cultural assault — propaganda disguised as principle or knowledge. The purity of the "Aryan" or Caucasian race is a favourite principle. Genetic inferiority is a favourite field of knowledge. Libraries are full of erudite texts that prove, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that Jews, the Irish, Mexicans, blacks, homosexuals, women are slime.

These eloquent and resourceful proofs are classified as psychology, theology, economics, philosophy, history, sociology, the so-called science of biology. Sometimes, often, they are made into stories or poems and called art. Degradation is dignified as biological, economic, or historical necessity; or as the logical consequence of the repulsive traits or inherent limitations of the ones degraded. Out on the streets, the propaganda takes a more vulgar form. Signs read "Whites Only" or "Jews and Dogs Not Allowed." Hisses of kike, nigger, queer, and pussy fill the air. In this propaganda, the victim is marked. In this propaganda, the victim is targeted. This propaganda is the glove that covers the fist in any reign of terror.

This propaganda does not only sanction violence against the designated group; it incites it. This propaganda does not only threaten assault; it promises it.

These are the dreaded images of terror. A Jew, emaciated, behind barbed wire, nearly naked, mutilated by the knife of a Nazi doctor: the atrocity is acknowledged.

A Vietnamese, in a tiger cage, nearly naked, bones twisted and broken, flesh black and blue: the atrocity is acknowledged.

A black slave on an American plantation, nearly naked, chained, flesh ripped up from the whip: the atrocity is acknowledged.

A woman, nearly naked, in a cell, chained, flesh ripped up from the whip, breasts mutilated by a knife she is entertained, the boy-nest-door's favourite fantasy, every man's precious right, every woman's potential fate. The woman tortured is sexual entertainment.

Body Politic 11

The woman tortured is sexually arousing.

The anguish of the woman tortured is sexually exciting.

The degradation of the woman tortured is sexually entrancing.

The humiliation of the woman tortured is sexually pleasing, sexually thrilling, sexually gratifying.

Women are a degraded and terrorized people. Women are degraded and terrorized by men. Rape is terrorism.

Men are terrorism. Medical butchering is terrorism. Sexual abuse is its hundred million forms is terrorism.

Women's bodies are possessed by men. Women are forced into involuntary childbearing because men, not women, control women's reproductive functions. Women are an endangered population — the crop we harvest is children, the fields we work are houses. Women are forced into committing sexual acts with men to retain integrity because the universal religion — contempt for women — has as its first commandment that women exist purely as sexual fodder for men.

Women are an occupied people. Our very bodies are possessed, taken by others who have an inherent right to take, used or abused by others who have an inherent right to use or abuse.

The ideology that enforces and justifies this systematic degradation is a fascist ideology — the ideology of inferiority. No matter how it is disguised, no matter what refinements pretty it up, this ideology, reduced to its essence, postulates that women are functionally suited to function only as breeders, partners of ass, and servants.

This fascist ideology of female inferiority is the preeminent ideology of our time. As Shulamith Firestone put it in The Dialectic of Sex, "Sex class is so deep as to be invisible." That women exist to be used by men is, quite simply, common point of view, and the concomitant of this point of view, inexorably linked to it, is that violence used against women is force to fulfill our so-called natural functions. It is the reality of violence against women.

Every act of terror or crime committed against women is justified as sexual necessity and/or is dismissed as utterly unimportant. This extreme callousness passes as normalcy, so that when women, voices or decades or centuries of unresolvable abuse, do raise our voices in outrage at the crimes committed against us, we are accused of stupidity or lunacy, or are ignored as if we were flacks of dust instead of flesh and blood.

We women are raising our voices now, because all over this country a new campaign of terror and vilification is being waged against us. Fascist propaganda celebrating sexual violence against women is sweeping this land.

Fascist propaganda celebrating the degradation of women is inundating cities, college campuses, small towns. Pornography is the propaganda of sexual fascism.

Pornography is the propaganda of sexual terrorism. Images of women bound, bruised, and maimed on virtually every street corner, on every magazine rack, in every drug store, in movie house, on movie house, on billboard posters, pasted on walls, are death threats to a female population in rebellion. Female rebellion against male sexual despotism, female rebellion against male sexual authority, is now a reality throughout this country. The men, meeting rebellion with violence, defend the terror tactics of maimed female bodies in every public place.

We are forced either to capitulate, to be beaten back by those images of degradation into silent acceptance of female abuse as a fact of life, or to develop strategies of resistance derived from a fully conscious will to resist. If we capitulate — smile, beg, pretend that the woman in chains has nothing to do with us, avert our eyes as we pass her image a hundred times a day — we have lost everything. What, after all, does all our work against rape or wife-beating amount to when every act of their pictures is worth a thousand of our words?

Strategies of resistance are developing. Women are increasingly refusing to accept the penis, humiliating women for fun, pleasure, and sex is the main right of men. Petitions, leafleting, picketing, boycotts, organized vandalism, speak-outs, teach-ins, militant harassment of distributors and exhibitors of woman-hating films, and an unyielding refusal to give assent to the politically anti-feminist fellow-travellers of the pornographers are increasing, as feminists refuse to cower in the face of this new campaign of annihilation. These are beginning actions. Some are rude and some are civil. Some are short-term and some are long-term strategies that require extensive organization and commitment. Some disregard male law, break it with militancy and pride. Others aim to demand that the law must protect women from brazen terrorization. All of these actions arise out of the true perception that pornography actively promotes violent contempt for the integrity and rightful freedom of women. And, despite male claims to the contrary, feminists, not men, are being arrested and prosecuted by male law enforcers, all suddenly "civil libertarians" when male privilege is confronted on the streets by gay, those who apply women. The concept of "civil liberties" in this country has not ever, and does not now, embody principles and behaviours that respect the sex-differentiated human. Therefore, when pornographers are challenged by women; police, district attorneys, and judges punish the women, all the while ritually claiming to be the legal guardians of "free speech." In fact, they are the legal guardians of male profit, male property, and phallic power.

Feminist actions against pornography must blanket the country, so that no pornographer can hide from, ignore, ridicule, or find refuge from the outrage of women who will not be degraded, who will not submit to terror. Wherever women claim any dignity or want any possibility of freedom, we must confront the fascist propaganda that celebrates atrocity against us head on — expose it for what it is, expose those who make it, those who show it, those who defend it, those who consent to it, those who enjoy it.

In the course of this difficult and dangerous struggle, we will be forced, as we experience the intransigence of those who commit and support these crimes against us, to ask the hardest and deepest questions, the ones we so dread:

— what is this male sexuality that requires our humiliation, that literally swells with pride at our anguish;

— what does it mean that yet again — and after years of feminist activity — the men (gay, leftist, whatever) who proclaim a commitment to social justice are resolute in their refusal to face up to the meaning and significance of the anti-feminist advocacy of yet another woman-hating plague;

— what does it mean that the pornographers, the consumers of pornography, and the apologists for pornography are the men we grew up with, the men we talk with, live with, the men who are familiar to us and often cheered by us as friends, fathers, brothers, and sons;

— how, surrounded by this flesh of our flesh that despises us, will we defend the worth of our lives, establish our own authentic integrity, and, at last, achieve our freedom? □

Adapted from a lecture, Copyright © 1977 by Andrea Dworkin and a lecture, Copyright © 1979 by Andrea Dworkin. All rights reserved.

Andrea Dworkin is the author of Woman's Work (Doubleday, 1974) and Our Blood: Professions and Discourses on Sexual Politics (Harper and Row, 1978). She is currently working on a feminist analysis of pornography, to be published by Anchor/Doubleday in 1981.

In the April 1978 issue of TBP, Gerald Hannon expresses sharp disagreement with the feminist position on obscenity laws — specifically the presentation made by Lorena Clark and Debra Lewis to the Parliamentary Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Hannon condemns the feminist position, "Intelligent, articulate, impassioned — wrong," he calls it. Hannon's own position on the issue is simple enough, if not simplistic: "There should be only one reason to appeal before the government on the topic of obscenity, and that is to demand the abolition of all laws that would restrict its use or distribution."

Hannon's stand, the position of TBP and that of gay liberation are directly opposed to the feminist position. Let's and the charade. We disagree and it is time that we examined the implications of this basic political conflict. Because both feminist and gay movements are liberation movements, it has become convenient and satisfying to assume that our interests coincide in all cases. This allows us to presuppose that our differences are merely ones of emphasis, political skill or sophistication; that there is in fact ONE RIGHT position for both movements, if only we can find it; that disagreement is essentially an internal matter which can be resolved by persuasion or compromise. We believe it is in the interests of both movements to rid ourselves of this delusion.

Feminists and gay liberationists do have much in common, can and should work together as allies on many issues. However, the basic interest of women as expressed through feminism and the self-interest of gay men do not always coincide. At least we have some clear-cut evidence of this fact of life.

Hannon insists that if our society adopted a laissez-faire stance on pornography and a simple no-censorship line we can expect to live happily ever after.

"Pornography is the propaganda of sexual terrorism. Images of woman bound, bruised and maimed... are death threats to a female population in rebellion."

We have found that this is not so. In fact, as women, we expect that the abolition of censorship laws would give us few advantages and a lot more of Snuff. It is in the interests of women to make a beginning at changing the "victim" stereotype which makes it acceptable and "normal" to brutalize us. It is this victim stereotype that is celebrated in Snuff and in much of the pornography that Hannon and the TBP would rescue for the sake of their liberation. Feminists have determined that we have more to gain and less to lose if Snuff and similar obscenities which pose a danger to women are stopped. Hannon in his article has helped to clarify another crucial point — that we as women have more to gain and less to lose from specific guidelines governing violence in pornography than we — and that includes gay men.

We are not stupid. We know that we run the risk that censorship guidelines can be used against us, against our art and our politics. If we must defend the depiction of healthy nudity or censorship on sex, whether straight or gay, we are willing to pay the price (at any rate, it is not the case that any ban on "cocks & balls" or on Ulysses follows from the Standing Committee Reports). Feminists have two options,

We can choose to protest bigoted and political decisions to censor, as we have done in the case of Pretty Baby, or we can settle back and watch the ongoing brutalization of women for profit, content with the fact that at least we are being victimized in a "free" society.

The other option is particularly attractive, but we have come to realize that there is no best of all possible worlds. We have chosen. We will challenge the censor who makes a law that is not consistent with our interests. But no amount of liberal rhetoric will convince us that we should leave cold-blooded entrepreneurs free to put us down. This is clearly not the same choice that gay liberation has made.

Gay liberation is male, regardless of the number of lesbians — never very many — who are in its ranks. This is reflected in its political stance and in its priorities. And this is as it should be. Consciousness of oppression and therefore the drive for change must proceed from the gut. Otherwise that drive is in danger of becoming abstracted, of melting into humanistic liberalism — of losing its bite. Feminists must not expect men, straight or gay, to drop their own immediate concerns and make out to battle their priority. We are not interested in that kind of solidarity, or in the kind that finds other libertarians trying to incorporate a subordinate position into the so-called larger, i.e., their, context. When we have differences, no one is necessarily misguided and in need of a steady hand to lead us onto the right path. Specifically in the case of censorship, we are not wrong when we disagree; our interests are legitimately different.

Liberation would do well to cease paying lip-service to feminism on the one hand while interpreting our interests for us on the other. It is not only hypocritical and chauvinistic, it is also plain bad for their own cause. It is the same attitude that continues to keep feminists and Marxists at odds with each other. Whether it results from a drive to dominate or from sheer myopia, it is incompatible with real cooperation between the sexes.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

The government has moneyed interests at heart. Why then is it so eager to place severe restrictions on one of its most powerful constituents — pornography? We must look closely because in this case the restrictions would seem to coincide with the interests of the anti-sexist movement.

The answer maybe not the whole of Susan Cole Eve Zarembo Toronto

Capitalism, it seems to me, is a system essentially without harmony. The government has the job of a conductor charged with wringing music from an orchestra in which each player has a different score. Some tunes it still manages, or it would have no audience. But some players in this chaos fit no lines, do no dissonant and wish to play.

that the family is at the very root of sex.

Are we then to support pornographers because what they do may weaken the family? No. And I don't think I was praising that. For both government and pornographers are propelled by money and not by people's needs. That they are at odds is no wonder in this ensemble of discord. It would be folly to throw our lot in with one of these enemies against the other. And fully beyond comprehension to support the government — which is intent on lumping us with the pornographers and crushing us with them.

Won't the government be gleeful when it can close down a lesbian magazine, because of its sexual content, and defuse the protest by saying, "these are the laws which feminists asked for?"

Merv Walker
Toronto

The May issue of TBP contained a letter from Mariana Valverde on feminism and pornography which really needs to be answered because it supports the most dangerous idea: that liberation — in this case, sexual liberation — can be promoted by repressive legislation and censorship.

When people on the right, the Anita Bryants and Simma Holts, advocate authoritarian means of this kind "for the good of society," one knows how they evaluate their demands. They are the enemies of any kind of liberation, and can be dealt with accordingly. But when people who identify with a liberation movement, such as women's liberation or gay liberation, promote repressive legislation as a means of achieving their ends — our ends — there is a danger of a different kind, the danger that the movement will sabotage its own goals by choosing the wrong means to achieve them.

The fundamental fallacy of which people like Valverde are guilty is the belief that because something is bad, or appears to be bad, it ought to be banned.

Valverde has completely missed the point of the two articles in TBP's April issue, as I understood them. The articles opposed anti-pornography legislation because (1) it would be used for repressive purposes (e.g. against gays — by those who enforce it and (2) it doesn't work. Valverde somehow contrives this as a defense of the pornographic industry and its products.

This is a complete misunderstanding of the issue. Certainly the pornography industry is exploitative, and mostly interested in making money. (So is the food industry, the tourist industry, the mass media, etc.) — our society always degrades and warps human nature by only meeting them if it is possible to make money doing so.) And certainly most pornography is terrible stuff: unimaginative, exploitative of women, etc.

There is no dispute that it is necessary to criticize, boycott, and oppose exploitative pornography. Despite what Valverde claims, I do not hear anyone attempting "a whole-hearted defense of any and all pornography." What is at issue is the question of whether people who support sexual liberation should join the right, the puritans and the reactionaries, in supporting the idea that the state should enforce a certain view of what should be allowed and what shouldn't. What is at issue is not that there are 'good' movies and 'bad' movies, 'good' books and 'bad' books, but the idea that the state — or any powerful group, church, media, "liberation" — should have the power to decide what may be read and seen. (Or what may not be read and seen. Or more accurately, what may be read and seen legally and what will be read and seen illegally.)

It is a fact that sexuality is an important subject in literature and art. There can also be — and this is where there is interest in liberation must stand in opposition to the repressive right — good pornography, literature and art whose purpose is to arouse the reader or viewer in a way that promotes healthy sexual feelings and activity. Sexual arousal, after all, tends to be a good thing, so art that is sexually exciting can be a good thing also.

"Sexuality is an important subject in literature and art. There can be good pornography... that promotes healthy sexual feelings."

The question is: who is to decide whether a particular piece of art is good or bad, whether it is exploitative or non-exploitative, whether it should be banned or not? Surely the answer must be that no one can be trusted with the power to make such decisions for other people.

To defend obscenity laws at the present time is to give such authority to those who now have power and influence: the lawmakers, the crown prosecutors, the Toronto Stars, the police. They would interpret the laws, and they would use them to suppress what they consider obscene.

The pornography industry and its products must be opposed, but they must not be opposed by measures that are worse than the problem. They must not be opposed at the price of giving our enemies more weapons to use against us.

Three other things should also be considered: 1. The market for unhealthy pornography has been created by sexual repression. More repression will worsen the problem, not solve it. 2. The exploitative portrayal of women in pornography is a reflection of social attitudes. It is primarily an effect, not a cause. (Surely no one believes that pornography has caused sexism?) 3. Despite the many things wrong with it, it is clear from numerous studies that the free availability of pornography reduces sex crimes.

Finally, one comment on a remark of Valverde's. She refers to Gerald Hannon's criticism of Lorraine Clark and Debra Lewis ("thoughtful, intelligent, articulate, impassioned — and wrong") as "an insult to women." Surely there is a difference between an insult and a criticism. Surely to state the opinion that two women are wrong on a particular issue is not an insult to all women. Remarks like that contribute nothing to an atmosphere of positive discussion.

Ulli Diemer
Toronto

Throughout I love pornography, I do not believe in freedom of the press, where freedom is interpreted as permission to represent just anything. I should like to defend Lorraine Clark's views on pornography from Gerald Hannon's on them (TBP, April). Hannon's error lies not in being sexist, but in confusing political savvy with political doctrine. Hannon's concern is that Ms. Clark's ideas be turned into ideology by repressive legislators. This worry has turned out to be justified: Ms. Clark's desire to see degradation be the sole criterion for obscenity has been dissolved into ineffectiveness in the federal omnibus porn bill. Degradation has merely been lacked on (along with the 'harmful') to the already existing list of criteria.

Nevertheless Ms. Clark's desire is a good one and though it was conceived primarily to force straight porn, it has a special appropriateness for gay porn. If we are not naive enough to suppose that porn is (left contained), but has a day effect (check out the back rooms and 'lounges' of porn houses if you're unsure) and so ought to be subjected to social evaluations, then it seems to me that portrayals of gays degrading gays for the titillation of other gays should be banned as promoting self-hate. Take for example the golden shower sequence from the Gages' Kansas City Trucking Co., in which a group of would-be-cowboy suckdickers hese down, in artsy, vaseined, slow motion, a kneeling, slightly bowed hippy; the scene, which is gratuitous in an otherwise fun flick, should simply be clipped as degrading to gays. I do not wish to suggest bannings based on certain taboo subject matters (or "inappropriate objects of sexual gratification" as the law would have it), but solely on whether the portrayals are degrading or not; and this requires evaluative judgment. It seems to me, for instance, that in Wakefield Poole's classic Moving the first fastfucking sequence is hunky-dory while the second is the most degrading thing I've ever seen. Pornographers (see Rick's comments on this scene in Advocate No. 238, cf. Gage's comments in In Touch No. 34) and other libertarian ideologues (John Rechy, John Lee) try to rationalize degrading sexual performances by the claim that the participants are consenting adults. This claim, however, naively assumes that no one ever knowingly does wrong.

Perhaps Hannon took a libertarian. In any case he claims that all porn laws should be abolished because they are vacuous. But the best laws are guidelines and are not quantifiable (as are applications of tax tables). They contain evaluative language which requires interpretation and judgement in their execution (read the Bill of Rights for standard "excessive" "cruel and unusual"). What is needed is not the elimination of such institutions as the Ontario Film Censors Board, but the inclusion on them of an open gay member with good taste, whose views in matters gay would be taken as final as a matter of senatorial courtesy. Every cocksucker knows the moment at which in sexual manipulations he is turned from a willing, desiring mutual participant into a tolerating instrument of masturbation. It is at this moment that the censor's knife should fall.

Richard Mohr
Toronto

It was dusk when they knocked on the door — that time of day when it is most difficult to define anything with any degree of certainty.

They were neat and clean-cut. One of them carried an executive-style briefcase. If this were the '50s or early '60s, they would pass for a couple of typical salesmen hawking the Encyclopedia Britannica from door to door. In 1978, however, no one would mistake this pair of super-straight robots for anything other than a couple of RCMP officers doing the only thing they know how — "law-enforcing." That is exactly how they described their mission when I questioned their presence on my doorstep.

When I asked to see a warrant, one of them produced a document entitled: "Confirmation of Oath." It was of several days vintage and signed by a justice of the peace. Among other things, it mentioned that it was valid only during daylight hours. I pointed out to the officer bearing the document that it was no longer daylight. He shrugged his shoulders and retorted that it didn't really matter as his colleague was in possession of a "Writ of Assistance."

Customs and Excise officials had intercepted some "dirty books" sent by first class mail from Europe for my own personal use. As they "had reason to believe" that I might be in possession of other similar material, they had ordered a raid on my private residence.

The officers looked through the books and separated them into two piles — "OK" and "Not OK." From time to time one would ask the other his opinion of a particular book and act accordingly.

When the gallant protectors of my morals left with a box full of porn, it didn't exactly make me feel like my private sex life. The remaining material does the job more than adequately.

Other aspects of the affair did, however, bother me greatly.

The fact that my home was not treated with respect as a private place where I could lead my own private life.

The fact that Customs and Excise officials will refuse to inform a member of the public of what they consider obscene and illegal, but will notify the RCMP that I have broken one of their vaguely worded laws they have illegally opened my mail.

The fact that two totally unqualified individuals should decide what I may or may not look at in private.

The fact that most Canadians don't seem to give a damn as long as it doesn't directly affect them.

Me today, you tomorrow, all Canadians in the near future.

Possible?

You better believe it is. If you don't, we're all in trouble, bad trouble.

It is just the kind of trouble that the RCMP is informing that the material they seized, and which they subsequently grossly over-valued, is being confiscated for non payment of duty.

Alan Buckley
Toronto

Delegates to the 1978 conference of the Canadian Lesbian and Gay Rights Coalition voted overwhelmingly to oppose new legislation pending in Canada which would broaden the definition of obscenity, and impose harsher penalties on lawbreakers.

The resolution was prefaced by the following: "Whereas the suppression of erotic material does nothing to attack the roots of the oppression of women..."

Does nothing to attack the roots. Pornography which degrades women, which incites violence against them, there's a lot of it — is simply one more cultural expression of the fact that women are a "terrorized people." By no means is it the most important.

Movies tell the same story. Television does it consummately well, does it daily, does it to far more men — and women — than would ever pick up a copy of Hustler.

Laws won't stop it. Laws might stop The Body Politic. TBP's case is a clear example of the way obscenity laws will be used. They do nothing to attack the roots of the oppression of women, the degradation of women," reports the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, "the existence of violence, and the expression of horror and cruelty will not be alleviated by suppressing their depiction." Such laws will attack, and possibly destroy, publications exploring what our sexuality means. Should TBP be forced out of existence by punitive fines, it would not be very reassuring that some feminists will decide to "protest such a bigoted and political decision."

If material exists which offends a group, that group should protest; that group should make clear what such material is really doing, no matter how it is disguised. And that group should insist to change a society which depends for its identity on the production of such material.

Calling for pornography legislation is calling for the state to do some of your dirty work for you. No one — least of all feminists — should make that mistake.

by Gerald Hannon
Body Politic/13

Join Gay Ontario

The next Ontario Provincial Gay Conference is being planned for the Labour Day Weekend. It is to take place at St Clair College in Windsor. Individual lesbians and gay men are welcome to attend, as well as those associated with specific political, religious, social or other groups.

We hope to make it a relaxing weekend with cultural, sporting, entertainment, and political events. We want you to take part in shaping the future of CGRO, and we welcome your suggestions. Please fill out the information below and we will keep you informed of developments.

Thank you.

Do you associate yourself with a particular gay/women's/lesbian organization? ☐ Yes ☐ No
If so, which one? _____

Which of the following events/workshops would appeal to you at a weekend conference?

- ☐ Dance
- ☐ Banquet
- ☐ Gay Parents
- ☐ Gay Youth
- ☐ Child Custody
- ☐ Rape Workshop
- ☐ Live Entertainment
- ☐ Religious Caucus
- ☐ What is Obscene?
- ☐ Literary/art displays
- ☐ Counselling techniques
- ☐ Aging and its problems
- ☐ Competitive Sports
- ☐ Non-Competitive Sports or Games
- ☐ CGRO Today — A Crisis of Growth
- ☐ Gay Teachers — What are they doing?
- ☐ Gay Men/Women — Can we pool our strength?
- ☐ OTHERS _____

Do you have any special areas of interest? _____

Limited number available!

The Coalition for Gay Rights in Ontario is making available to the general public copies of the brief recently presented to the Ontario Legislature.

The brief has been well received at Queen's Park, and has prompted editorial comment in Toronto dailies calling for the inclusion of sexual orientation in the Ontario Human Rights Code.

For your copy, send $1.50 to:
CGRO
PO Box 156, Stn P
Toronto, ON
M5S 2S7

THE NEW AGE

Romance

Romance is such a difficult topic. I think a hundred disconnected things all at once. It's fabulous but it's contradictory: a reason to live — and something to slit your wrists over. I think of it as an intense experience which is always stimulating, and often a pleasant sensation.

Being in love means being excessive. Excess of emotion, excess of confusion, excess of perfume, of flowers, candy. Love isn't just blue, it's oceans of blue. It doesn't just make the world go round, it spins the whole universe (with you-know-who at the centre). But one thing about excess is that you can never overdo it, which is perhaps love's most attractive feature.

Romantic situations have no models apart from melodramas. Melodramas are completely predictable, which makes people feel secure as they go through the motions of being in love. But they're also narrowing and confining, they lead to frustration. And they are boring. Is your life a soap opera? Mine is, at least in part. How depressing.

Melodramas are primarily a heterosexual invention. That is to say, they are a product of the dominant ideology, the dominant role-model — which is heterosexual. In our own lives we have been captured by heterosexual methods of romance. We are constantly under attack.

Or is it so bad? Heterosexual role-models have their sinister effect, but there are exceptions to every rule. If we don't want the "normal" alternatives, we can make brave attempts at something new. We can be anti-normal.

People are always talking about "maturity" when they talk about sex. Somehow they assume that as one gets older one unravels the big secret.

I think sex is always totally mysterious. We approach it intuitively, and there's no age at which one becomes more intuitive, more "capable" of dealing with it.

Sex involves a lot of absurd rituals which have a lot to do with our view of romance. Weddings are one reflection, one night stands another.

Disco music is beating out "I'll NEEED AAA MAAAAAN." Drink in hand, I'm posing languidly by the far wall, looking for... the man of my dreams. I'm thinking about what a funny situation it is, but nobody else thinks so. No fun-end games in this joint, disco heaven is dead serious.

I am attracted to people and I don't know why. Often they're of the most banal sort, often it's because they fulfill (in the most basic way) some romantic vision. I want to make it with a Russian sailor. Or an airline pilot. Most of all, I want to have a really torrid affair with an Italian.

Someone very handsome, I think, who knew a few good pasta dishes and could sing me Neapolitan arias in the evening. It's such a classic thing, you know, so exotic — Botticelli faces, bronzed bodies artfully sunning themselves on the rocks by the side of Capri. Someday I'll probably have an affair with an Italian and find out something quite different, but for now, it's an entertaining obsession.

X and I are walking on the evening of the first snow. Nothing but white in front of us, behind us nothing but footprints trailing into a very short horizon. His profile cuts through the dots of snow separating the two of us. We stop under a tree and breathe into each other's faces while we talk about what we are going to do next.

by Tim Guest

Books

Making it in the murder market

A Reason to Kill is Canada's first dyke detective novel. Eve Zaremba talks about writing it.

Eve Zaremba explained to me one sunny June afternoon that she didn't sit down to write A Reason to Kill, she sat down to write a detective novel — as a dare to herself. "I've read a lot of mystery novels, a lot of detective stories, and I like them. I enjoy the genre — I enjoy all the traditional characteristics of mysteries. The idea of writing one came to me about two years ago while I was driving back to Toronto from British Columbia, and I decided to do it and see what happened. I chose to write a mystery because I don't think I'm a serious novelist. I wanted to do something with a formula. A Reason to Kill was written within the tradition of the genre. I thought, 'obviously a woman detective.' Then all I had to do was come up with a plot, and that wasn't very hard."

It took Eve a year to actually write the novel. I asked her if she thought she could churn them out like Agatha Christie does. "Well, I've written another one," I wondered if she followed-up, so I think it is probably quite possible to write one a year."

As Eve said, A Reason to Kill employs a lot of the techniques of the traditional mystery novel. I wondered if she intended it to be a parody. But she thinks that by now all mysteries are parodies of "the mystery novel." "In a sense, we've all been entertained after some of the classics" — works by Hammett, Christie, Chandler, Sayers. After a while the contemporary mystery writer couldn't avoid sounding like a parody. A Reason to Kill is not a deliberate parody. I only intended to write a fast-moving, contemporary and, I hope, popular mystery novel. I was hardly trying to be innovative."

But despite that disclaimer, A Reason to Kill, while carefully defined by the traditions of mystery writing, has its own approach. Most detective novels are written by, and about, straight men (though there are notable exceptions written by the female masters of the craft, and by and large the heterosexual view predominates). Quite logically, Eve Zaremba's own world view colours her novel. Some of the passing social commentary is subtle, some of it — the feminism for instance — is not, but either way it is hard to miss. "If there's any political content in the book, and I think there is some," Eve explains, "it is mainly on the gay issue. We are surrounded by a world in which heterosexuality is assumed, and I want to write novels in which that is not the case. The fact that the detective, Helen Keramos, is a lesbian is to anyone who doesn't start with an assumption of heterosexuality — quite clear. If readers start with an assumption of heterosexuality, they are going to miss half the book. But that's their problem, as far as I'm concerned; they shouldn't have started with that assumption. In this particular novel, the plot has a gay theme, so that made it quite easy. But I'm not going to write other novels in which it's not safe to assume everyone's straight, but they won't necessarily have gay plots."

The victim in A Reason to Kill is a gay man. What were the considerations behind that decision? One was that Eve believes society still thinks that what happens to men is more important than what happens to women, especially in relation to sexuality. Eve told me that Martin, the victim, "being a young gay man fit the plot better — he made it more credible." But another reason, a more significant one, is that "I wanted to write a book in which gayness was an issue. It would have been harder for me to write if the victim had been a gay woman. I don't think I'm prepared, at this point, to deal with something I'm that close to. I can achieve sufficient distance in talking about and dealing with being gay in relation to a man in a way that I don't think I could in relation to a woman."

Eve Zaremba. "I think lesbianism should just be part of the fabric of things. I know that this is a total fantasy."

What impact does Eve think the novel will have on the straight reader? "I don't think it's going to have any startling impact. Your average mystery reader may think it's a little different, at least I hope so. For most of them it will be just one more mystery. Perhaps once the series is underway, once there are three or four novels like this out, who knows, something might start to jell. But one book isn't going to make a big difference either way — to me or anyone else. I just hope to make a tiny difference that it stands on its own feet as a piece of mystery writing."

Eve didn't really have any trouble getting A Reason to Kill published. "Of course I got refusals from publishers. I submitted it to several places simultaneously and Paperjacks, the one that I wanted, came through. I wrote the kind of book that they publish and I wanted a company with as large a distribution in Canada as possible and they have it. It's only published in Canada and that's a problem. There's no money in it."

"One amusing incident on the road to getting it published was the blurb on the back. You might not have noticed, but there's nothing anywhere on the cover to indicate that the book has a gay theme, which I found quite 'surprising,' shall we say. I operated on the assumption that mass market publishers are into exploitation. In fact, I was all prepared to fight against some misrepresentation or sensationalization of homosexuality. Instead, I find myself stuck with this really dull little blurb. And there's no doubt in my mind that in this case, a certain amount of homophobic over-ruled the profit motive. Just a little mention of the gay content of the book on the cover would have opened up a whole new market in addition to the regular mystery market. But I was told that an ad in TBP was all it would take to get the book marketed. The argument is absurd, and I can't believe that it doesn't have something to do with the fact that they are just plain uncomfortable with homosexuality. They accepted the manuscript; they loved it; they thought it would sell, that it's a good book within its terms of reference, but well...we all know the story..."

Eve is quite upfront about her detective, Helen, being a dyke. But so where in the course of the story does she actually come out to any of the other characters. I asked Eve why. "I didn't think it was necessary to spell it out. It's not hidden — she's even called a dyke — it should be obvious. I think that lesbianism should just be part of the fabric of things. I know that this is a total fantasy. But then, I chose to write a book that's a total fantasy — as all mysteries are. Helen's lesbianism is only expressed in terms that are sort of organic. She very clearly doesn't have a husband or boy friend, she relates primarily to women. She doesn't pretend to be straight, she just goes along and does her job. I've been asked the question 'But what about her personal life?' Meaning her sex life. Maybe there will be a book when I'm old and gray about Helen and her sex life, but right now, I'm writing mysteries. And in real mystery — not the sleazy ones — the detective does not have a sex life. The mind that unravels the plot is the real concern." I thought about that. Part of me wants Helen Keramos to be a blatant dyke stomping around showing the rest of the world how it should be done. But another part of me recognizes that many a real life tough dyke gets by just the way Helen Keramos does — not by pretending to be straight, but by simply going along and doing a job.

I found that many of the characters in A Reason to Kill were people in my world. Most mysteries are about people completely foreign to me, people at weekend house parties, bridge games in elegant Victorian mansions, vacationers in exotic places. I had to remind myself that to the average, straight reader of mysteries the radical activist cranking away at the geyser in the basement, the gay businessman/operator, the dyke ex-soldier turned investigator are just as unfamiliar, maybe even more unfamiliar.

As Eve says, "The characters in mystery stories are not the people in most people's lives. People read mysteries to escape the real world. I thought about a small minority that can relate to the book on a different level. It isn't written mainly for us to read, but it is written for us in the sense that it strives not to exploit us or distort our experience."

by Gillian Searchell

A Reason to Kill

Eve Zaremba
Paperjacks, 1978, $1.95

Eve Zaremba's first novel provides a rollicking romp through the genre of detective fiction. All the ingredients are present: a mysterious disappearance which leads to the hiring of a no-nonsense detective; several evasive characters who have their own investments in withholding the truth and hampering the search; and one character at whom the finger of guilt consistently points. A finger of guilt which shifts, as it usually does, from the most uneasy character to the most unlikely. And of course, we should not forget the moment at which all the suspects are gathered in one room and, under the ruthless probing of the private eye, the real murderer gives himself away.

It is the sheer predictability of the genre which supplies Zaremba with the trappings for parody. Sharp, hard-hitting prose, a female private eye who plays the usual macho games associated with Mickey Spillane, a hero who gets herself out of scrapes by being tougher than her opposition and who wears the wounds of the good who do combat with evil. All the elements create sympathy for the hero, who is, after all, quite human: she gets scoused, she has friends, she works like a beaver to solve a case, and all this with a relentless morality by which she sees herself as a force for justice and equality.

Who could resist Helen Keramos, with her insights into human culpability and her willingness to put herself on the line? The scene which places her on the lake with the prime suspect, Henry Borg, is the stuff of which this kind of fiction is made: spine-tingling, nerve-crushing tension of toe against toe, pitted against each other, each searching for the other's fatal flaw. And now for the cast of suspects: Katherine Payne, a sculptress who is remarkably indifferent to the disappearance of her son; Don McPherson, her alcoholic husband and a maker of pots at F&T; Oscar Borg, the elusive friend of the vanished Martin, and his father Henry, a business magnate who wants Oscar to step into his shoes and is willing to put Martin in cement shoes to do it. Har-har. Borg's servants, Molly and Fred Sharpe, know more than they say and far less than they think. And Nate Ottoline, introduced to us as a Young Street shark who dabbles in porn films and "swings both ways," turns out to be the gangster with all the markings of the pushcart, or vice versa.

A homosexual orientation on the part of Helen Keramos is implicit. She gets documentation and affection from Alex Edwards, a CBC reporter, and her fat drops in at Toronto gay clubs on Jarvis and Pape. She responds to suspect McPherson's insults regarding her "butch charm" and her dyke cruising potential with an insouciance intended to return snarl with snarl.

Two things worry my sense of credibility: the reason a West Coast investigator is hired to explore a possible murder in the province, deus ex machina by which Zaremba disposes of the problem of what to do with the murderer once he is discovered. Justice is meted out in godlike fashion, confirming the contention that A Reason to Kill is sheer escapism fiction.

There is a healthy air of feminism about Helen Keramos, implicit in her impressions of certain female characters and in her sympathy with women living roles as leftist cliché and clerical go-getter. Just as Zaremba also plays with the trappings of machismo, with the language of fists and wescracks, of verbal jousts and the preparedness to do violence. Some of the latter is incredible, as when Keramos takes on two hoods and single-handedly sets them to rout.

The strut and fret is that of a light-haired yuck intended only for entertainment. I enjoyed reading A Reason to Kill, but only because I had time to kill. I don't often indulge myself in a genre whose predictability is wearing.

by Gillian Chase

Music

Gotham pizzazz: (from left) Gary Herb, David McDaniel and Michael Pace

whole point," as Gotham's musical director Ron Abel explained, "is to have a good time. We've been in showbiz all our lives."

The trio sings adequately. The orchestration is adequate too. But, according to Abel, "We're actors more than musicians. All we want is to keep the action going." And everyone did seem to be having a wonderful time, obviously delighted with either the group itself or their repertoire — a balanced mingling of boppy uptempo numbers and more somber songs concerned with the low drama of love and life.

Even when the musical activity took a pause the pace of on-stage banter went on. There are words — lots of them — in a Gotham show, although none appear on the album. Words, monologues, dialogues, riddles, jokes, riddles on everything send-upable from New York to L.A. Gotham liked dope and they liked New York, the present tense, the seventies and Mayor Koch's programme for equal employment; specifically the placement of homosexuals on New York's police and fire squads. Gary Herb gave the audience his impression of the effect of this policy. A gay fireman at the scene of a fire gasps: "Oh Wary," breathily. "It's too hot," he goes on, "My mascara'll run."

"We're not a gay act," Michael Pace stated flatly after the show. "We're gay, but the act isn't." He said that straight people "love the act" as much as gay people do, and it seems Gotham plays to predominantly heterosexual audiences frequently in the States. "If we were a gay act we wouldn't make jokes about women or politics," Pace said.

Gotham's jokes on women, after all, are made in the same tone as those on Mayor Koch's politics, are about as funny, and whether the act is or isn't "a gay act" makes little difference in light of the fact that it looks and sounds like a gay act, if such a phenomenon exists at all. As to why both straights and gays love the act, why not? The image projected is formally smooth, the pace is even and seriousness of any sort is avoided completely. The humour is sociable, not social, with a bitter overview of a society that exists under a heavy cover of double-entendre and cloy malice. Sexuality is snatched out of the closet and dragged past the bed, to be spread on the table, poked at and ridiculed. This comedy may or may not derive from disillusionment with reality — certainly it's not from any coherent anger at it. At best it may be a dummy attempt to exorcise threat and dread, but I fear the Camp Cabaret style demonstrates only an inability to articulate the emotions and experiences of the young adult in "the modern era."

To Gotham, life might as well be a cabaret; all is pizzazz expressed by a plastic humour which amplifies the folly of life but does nothing to clarify it. I think they should trade their black sweat-lots in on polyester leisure suits in shades of jade green.

by James Wilson

Gotham

El Mocambo, Toronto

Gotham made their third appearance in Toronto in mid-June. On the night I attended, there was an eager audience, coming back loudly and on cue with applause, laughs, reactions-upon-request, responding actively to this "trio of singers in the 1970's," Gary Herb, Michael Pace and David McDaniel. "The

The Tom Robinson Band on the crest of the New Wave: (from left) "Dolphyn" Taylor, Tom Robinson, Danny Kuslow and Mark Ampler

Tom Robinson Band

El Mocambo, Toronto

The Tom Robinson Band played Toronto's El Mocambo June 10 and it was an inspiring set — not just another successful rock show or another promising talent. For the people who were there, Robinson was more than a new face, he was a new phenomenon: energetic music with lots of strong ideas to back it up. He sang about gay liberation, the Stonewall riot, and even dedicated a song to The Body Politic. He sang about Britain's neo-Nazi National Front, about racism, fascism, police harassment, and most of all about a world where right-wing forces like Anita Bryant are becoming so strong that they have to question our own survival. His music is designed to shake people out of their complacency and move them to action. It is anti-passive.

It is also "propaganda" — which some people are going to find offensive. It is great that an openly gay leftist should make it as a rock star, but music, I've always thought, is most effective and moving when it phrases ideas indirectly, ambiguously, when it tugs at the heart strings rather than storming the brain. That may be true, but Tom Robinson is definitely an exception. I expected anti-prop tacked on to rock and roll, but what he delivered was something infinitely more complex, and it was a knockout.

We should recall some of the roots of Robinson's music. Listening to the rock these days, it is difficult to believe that rock has anything like a radical tradition, but there was a time when the "music of teenage rebellion" was not a total cliché. Rock in the 50s was sexual in a period of repression, and in the 60s it was the catalyst for a whole counter-culture. For politics today to take rock as its medium or vice versa... well, it's not an unnatural development.

Moreover, the Tom Robinson Band has arrived on the scene after the crest of the New Wave. Bands like the Sex Pistols, the Clash, X-Ray Specs and countless others have created a new counter-culture that also functions as a support system. These bands define themselves as anti-status quo; the performers involved are not worried about "ruining" their careers by taking strong political stands. Rock Against Racism has become a grassroots movement famous throughout Britain. Last May, when it organized bands to play at a demonstration against the National Front, the Tom Robinson Band, the Clash and X-Ray Specs performed and 80,000 people showed up to hear. So, while Tom Robinson is not the only political rocker on the scene, he is the most explicit.

Robinson is also the first and only gay rock star, and the potential of this ought to be recognized. Imagine millions of suburban kids, ear to the radio, listening to "Long Hot Summer," or a thousand anxious closet cases reading the fabulous reviews. Not to mention the effect he is going to have on the tyranny of disco, which is the curse of the gay community. For many people Tom Robinson provides a new and positive identification with rock and roll. For me, it is politics electrified, and that in itself reveals a world of possibilities.

by Tim Guest

The Break-up of our Camp

Stories 1932 - 1935

Paul Goodman

edited by Taylor Stoer

Black Sparrow Press, 1978, $5.00
For 40 years Paul Goodman produced a book a year. Of all his writing he thought most highly of his poems and stories. A collected edition of the poems appeared in 1973 and now the collected stories has begun. This is the first of four volumes and it includes the earliest work that is neither incomplete nor juvenilia.

There are 11 independent stories and two story sequences here. The best are dazzling performances, masterpieces of tone and manner. While the tone varies, the manner is nearly always experimental, abstracting the meaningful gestures, thoughts, and encounters from the dramatic continuum. The stories thus generated are seldom realistic. Writing a 14-page tale about some Depression-era wars, Goodman in "The Wandering Boys" communicates most of the emotions and criticisms Steinbeck needed 600 pages of The Grapes of Wrath to deliver. He does it by refusing the conventional realism and by rejecting a plausible action with its significance. This may destroy common credibility, but through tonal control "The Wandering Boys" is warmly pastoral, a version of parable is achieved.

The method is a legacy of the short story writing of Irving, Hawthorne, Melville, and Mark Twain. Goodman's favorite was Hawthorne. "Idolings Clark" is based on the New England master "The Minister's Black Veil," but with what a difference. The end of the story finds schoolteacher Clark naked and exclaiming, "I at least shan't wear a black veil." Instead of being overwhelmed by the fact of mortality as Hawthorne's minister was, Goodman's hero accepts it and rejoices in its possibilities for immediate contact, skin to the world.

Like his great predecessors, then, Goodman uses the American tradition of experimental short fiction for his own ends, which of course now it is meant to be used. For readers committed to sexual liberation, the one of his ends perhaps most delightful is his eroticization of everyday life — more properly, his open acknowledgement of the eroticism of living. In the marvelously acute and whimsical "The propriety of St. Francis," a story partially about labor-industrial conflict, the saint's exchange with a young worker includes this lovely bit, "How thick his wrists are!" thought Francis. "They are as thick as Jess Witter's, Child," he said, "let me measure your wrists."

(Yes, such wrists are the work of a loving God!) The two story sequences are also informed by daily experience. In fact the earlier of them, "Johnson," is primarily motivated by the vicissitudes of Johnson's love for Leonard and is based in Goodman's own experience. And there's more to the best of Goodman? Very likely. Bring on the next three volumes.

by Ray Olson

Homosexuality in Nazi Germany

For a book dealing with homosexuality in Nazi Germany and the Nazi persecution and extermination of homosexuals, the author would like to communicate with anyone who has either firsthand experience or firsthand source materials. Please contact:

Frank Rector
102 West 18th Street
New York NY 10024

PAUL GOODMAN
CREATOR
SPIRIT-COME
LITERARY ESSAYS

Growing Up
Gay

Paul Goodman
Nature Heals
Dance As Vice

KILL HOSANN

LES
BELLES
SOEURS
A PLAY
BY
MICHEL
TREMBLAY

WILHELM VON GLOEDEN
PHOTOGRAPHS

THE MALE MUSE
A Gay Anthology

New titles
(and the return of a few older goodies) from Pink Triangle

The Gay
Health Guide

A GAY HEALTH
NATURAL SELF-DEFENSE TO HOMOSEXUALITY AND AIDS

LAW
LAW
LAW

Charles Ruby Lynn King
Paul Copeland Gary Rang
(Fourth edition)

DEFORMITY
LOVER
LIKE PIANO

THE MALE MUSE
A Gay Anthology

THE GAY HEALTH GUIDE By Robert L. Rowan & Paul J. Gillett. Written by an experienced urologist and a prominent psychologist, this book is the most reliable non-judgemental guide to gay health problems available today. Compassionate and informative.
No. 45 (12.50 + .20) $12.60

GROWING UP GAY, published by the Youth Liberation Press, this collection "is an eloquent account of the kind of pain and beauty that every young homosexual's life with from day to day."
No. 46 (1.50 + .20) $17.70

A REASON TO KILL, Eve Zaremba's first novel, a murder mystery with a gay twist. "A rollicking romp through the genre of detective fiction," said Gillian Chase in The Body Politic.
No. 47 (1.95 + .20) $2.20

RIGHT HAND LEFT HAND by one of Canada's best loved poets, Dorothy Livesey, this is "a true life of the Thirties": Paris, Montreal, Toronto, the West and Vancouver; love, politics, the Depression and feminism. A powerful and moving documentary.
No. 48 (6.95 + .30) $7.25

AND GOD BLESS UNCLE HARRY and his Roommate Jack. Who We're Not Supposed to Talk About. Cartoons collected from the New Yorker of gay magazines, Christopher Street.
No. 49 (2.95 + .20) $3.20

PATH OF SNOW by E.A. Lacey. Poems written over a period of 22 years in a wide variety of countries and circumstances, by a man who describes himself gladly as a "decadent romantic traditionalist."
No. 61 (3.95 + .25) $4.20

THE DEFORMITY LOVER and other poems by Felice Picano, New York novelist and poet. "Unadorned, sensual and perceptive, very much about gay life."
No. 42 (3.50 + .25) $3.75

THE MALE MUSE, Ian Young's gay poetry anthology includes works by Allen Ginsberg, Paul Goodman, Thom Gunn, Christopher Isherwood, Harold Norse, and more.
No. 60 (3.95 + .25) $4.20

3 BY PAUL GOODMAN Drawing the Line (No. 63), Goodman's best writings on science in our time, essays on violence, pacifism, anarchy and more, many long out of print. Creator Spirit Come (No. 64), literary essays covering such diverse topics as method, individualism, pornography and censorship. Perceptivity, provocative and innovative. And Nuts Hears (No. 65) psychological essays which firmly re-establish Goodman as one of the major intellectuals of Gestalt therapy. Included is the famous essay, "The Politics of Being Queer." Each (13.95 + .30) $14.25
Or buy all three - save $5.75! Check box No. 66 on the form.

ASHES FOR EASTER and other Monodramas, by the author of Love and the Walling Game, David Watmough. "He is an artist of language, a storyteller, a spinner of dreams."
No. 58 (5.95 + .25) $6.20

SOME ANGRY SUMMER SONGS Four short plays by John Herbert, Canada's best-known playwright abroad and often most contentious at home: the first Canadian collection by the author of For and Men's Eyes.
No. 59 (4.95 + .25) $5.20

WHISTLING THE ANGEL Stan Persky's chronicle of growth and of personal and political development, in a handsome paperback edition.
No. 62 (6.95 + .25) $7.20

6 BY MICHEL TREMBLAY Quebec's best-known and most controversial playwright. En Pieces Detachees (No. 51), an early look at the East End Montreal neighbourhoods that made the setting for later work like Forever Yours, Marie-Lou (No. 52) and the green-stamped madness of Les Belles Soeurs (No. 53). Also available: La Duchesse de Langeais and Other Plays (No. 54), a bonjour, Le Bonjour (No. 55), and the electrifying portrayal of a drag queen obsessed with his image as Elizabeth Taylor in Gloegatha, Hosanna (No. 56). All six in attractive individual editions from Talonbooks. Each (14.95 + .30) $15.25
Or buy all six for the price of five! Check box No. 57.

LAW LAW LAW The fourth edition of the citizen's pocket manual that has sold more than 50,000 copies. Across Canada, information on arrests, drugs, apartment problems, and a special chapter on homosexuality.
No. 50 (2.95 + .25) $3.20

STILL AVAILABLE:

THE JOY OF GAY SEX by Charles Silverstein & Edmund White. The best-selling guide that celebrates the joy that is one man loving another while at the same time giving practical advice on social problems and sexual techniques.
No. 21 (15.95 + .50) $16.45

OUR RIGHT TO LOVE A Lesbian Resource Book, produced in cooperation with the women of the US National Gay Task Force, and edited by Ginny Vida. This thorough reference guide brings together lesbian and feminist ideas, experiences and opinions on everything from legal issues to love affairs, religious experiences to sexuality.
No. 38 (15.50 + .50) $16.00

GETTING SEX by John Alan Lee. Gay people have learned to accept and fulfill sexual needs in many ways not available to heterosexuals. We may have a few things to teach the rest of the world. Lee takes a closer look.
No. 44 (8.95 + .35) $9.30

BACK IN STOCK:
DANCE AS DANCE by Graham Jackson. The first collection of dance reviews and articles published in Canada, authored by the man John Herbert calls "one of the sharpest and clearest writing on the national and international dance scene."
No. 25 (8.95 + .30) $9.25

WILHELM VON GLOEDEN PHOTOGRAPHER Charles Leslie's beautiful collection of the German baron's nude photographs of the youths and men of Sicily - a remarkable record of homoerotic at the turn of the century.
No. 24 (11.95 + .35) $12.30

Please send me:

Circle the code number for each of the books you wish to purchase at the right. For more than one copy, write the quantity on the dotted line. Cheques should be made payable to Pink Triangle Press and mailed to P.O. Box 836, Spadina, Toronto, Ontario M6R 1G2. If you want to charge your purchase on Visa or Mastercard, just print your card number and expiry date in the appropriate spaces below, and be sure to give us your signature. Please allow five to six weeks for delivery. We'll try to be speedy, but we can't promise anything for the Post Office.

Name _____
Address _____
City and provincial state _____
Change this purchase to: ☐ Visa ☐ Mastercard Number _____
Expiry date _____ Signature _____

(The opening two bars from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony in C minor.)

There are about forty different recorded versions of Beethoven's most famous symphony listed in the current Schwann Record Catalogue. Which one is for you? Should you buy the first, second or third version better to add Toscanini's famous recording to your collection? And how about Bruno Walter's or Otto Klemperer's or George Szell's? Just where does one begin? Counterpoint's Basic Classical Record Library Guide provides the answer. Covering 254 famous works by nearly 80 different composers, this guide recommends at least three versions of each work (including one budget best buy) with a brief commentary on each individual recording. It's an invaluable guide to choosing the best recording! And because the guide has been expertly prepared by Alexander Inglis, editor of the new classical record review journal, Counterpoint, you won't waste another dollar on a recording you don't want and wish you'd never bought!

Counterpoint's $2.95

Send $2.95 today for your postage paid copy to: Counterpoint Publishing Company, Dept. BP Box 196, Postal Station C, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5N 3Z4

We want your body.

Wake up to a warm, whirling tub, or relax after a long day in a hot, soothing one. The Hot Tub makes exercise more effective, too — and more fun. Drop in and we'll show you.

THE HOT TUB SHOP
2134 QUEEN ST. 691-4942
IN THE BEACHES

OUR IMAGE

Books

Lesbian patron, Winnaretta Singer, heir to the sewing machine fortune, with writer Colette

The Food of Love Princesses Edmond de Polignac (1865 - 1943) and her Salon Michael de Cossart

Harnish Hamilton (Thomas Nelson and Sons in Canada), 1978, $18.50

Along with the Bloomsbury circle, the Paris artistic scene of the belle époque continues to fascinate gays of both sexes on this side of the Atlantic. Living in a subculture with more leather bars than poets' circles, North American gays with a taste for "high culture" are nostalgically attracted to the glittering world of pre-depression European salons, in which homosexuality was often one more mark of cultural sophistication, on a par with a talent for composing, an old aristocratic name or a propensity to consumption.

In recent years, this nostalgic curiosity has been partly satisfied as it concerns the Bloomsbury circle by a series of books written by second-generation hangers-on such as Quentin Bell and Nigel Nicolson. The world of the Parisian upper crust around the turn of the century, however, has not received much attention, at least from English-speaking writers. Proust's semi-fictional reminiscences remain the classic on the topic to this date, even though something begins to be known about the lesbian literary circles of Gertrude Stein, Natalie Barney, Colette, and the willing poet Renée Vivien. The book under review is a much-needed attempt to add to our knowledge of the period by revealing the world of the Princesses de Polignac, a lesbian who made and unmade artistic and musical reputations by careful orchestration of the artists' egos in her sumptuous salons in Paris, London, and Venice.

Although a composer and painter in her own right, Mme de Polignac (born Winnaretta Singer) preferred to play the role of maecenas and pay everyone else to compose or paint, being especially fond of starving, avant-garde young talent of either sex. Her sexual preference remained strictly private: in artistic matters her only concern was to be seen as the trend-setting discoverer of the latest luminaries, and she did not make any special efforts to encourage lesbian or women artists.

A princess only by marriage, her immense wealth was due to her father Isaac Singer's world-famous sewing machine — mysterious references to this household appliance in the works of Jean Cocteau or Marcel Proust may in many cases be references to this woman's lifelong quest to redeem the sin of her money's humble origins by lavishly supporting avant-garde artists, from Eric Satie and Stravinsky to Isadora Duncan.

Michael de Cossart's book, unfortunately, is monotonous and badly written: lists of names, however famous, strung together with journalistic clichés do not an interesting book make, and the in-group anecdotes are, few, far between, and badly told. The author will also provoke the contempt of gays with his "explanations" of lesbianism as being caused (in the Princesses' case) by the absence of a strong mother-figure and (in the case of Violet Trefusius) by the presence of a strong mother. Where do straight women come from, one wonders. Cossart further alienates any potential gay readers by infelicitously referring to lovers as "friends," as if denying the existence of lesbianism, and writing in a patronizing and sexist tone. Sample: "Elizabeth de Gramont, who had just abandoned herself of her husband, the Duc de Clermont-Tonnerre, in favour of Sapphic friendships...". Is, from a literary point of view, affected, and from a political perspective, infuriating.

It would have been a pleasure to discover a sympathetic but detached account of the world of the Princesses de Polignac, something to balance Marcel Proust's excessively sensitive descriptions, which are, literary masterpieces that they are, suffer nevertheless from being self-indulgent and clichéd and which are, from the point of view of understanding homosexuality, extremely dated. Unfortunately, this book fails to provide either new information or intelligent analysis, and is definitely not worth its appropriately aristocratic price of $18.50.

Incidentally, the catchy title The Food of Love (an allusion to "If music be the food of love, play on," from Twelfth Night) is rather badly chosen, since there is little about music and even less about love between the two couples, and rather a lot about elegance, indolence, and snobbery.

by Mariana Valverde

August 1978

le 195 carlton street, tor, ont, tel 967 5918
couscousier licensed • lunch 12 to 3 • dinner 5:30 to 11:30
couscous a specialty
french and moroccan cuisine

Toronto Charter

S.V. Albattross V1 56' Sailing Ketch
Invites you to 'COME SAILING'.
Now booking for Spring Summer
'78 for a few, or a whole crew.

ALL-MALE CRUISE DEPARTS
TORONTO AUG. 15 FOR EAST COAST AND SAN JOAN VIA MONTREAL NEW YORK AND
PORT LAUDERDALE.
Come all or part way — low a weekly or monthly rate. Call now — the Albattross is available for your inspection.

PROFESSIONALLY SKIPPED
BY OWNERS

RATES AVAILABLE FOR PARTIES OF 2 — 20
For information and reservations:
Call: (416) 927-4388 or Write: Doug Haines or Frank Macintosh
P.O. Box 1964, Station Q
Toronto, Ontario M4T 2P2

Metropolitan Life

Fran Lebowitz

EP Dutton (Clarke, Irwin in Canada), 1978, $10.75

Notes on Fran: First off, just because Fran's comments on everything under the sun, which are however endemic to New York (which means they do include everything under the sun), are written in short, caustic takes does not mean they have not been thought out and laboured at scrupulously. One imagines Fran over the hot stove of literary activity all day (well, from midnight to 1 AM) slaving away at trying to scuffle some prose. She whips up a storm most of the time; that she bombs occasionally is in part due to her perilous occupation as a humorist. I for one think she's the hankie's sweet.

Speaking of which, Fran is not so naive as to believe that writing is not a grind, she is, after all, a "working girl." Writing is a grind, much like painting other people's houses during the summer, and is only worthwhile once you have the cash closed light in your fist or when your employer offers you the metaphorical equivalent of a hot bowl of soup.

The subjects through which Fran whizzes in her generally whiz-bang book, and which are subjects she generates despises, include digital clocks, consciousness-raising, conceptual art, Los Angeles, leisure suits, plants, copious consumption of amyl nitrate, the "assurative," and writing. Her style is brazenly epigrammatic (which I suppose is the only way to be epigrammatic). A soupçon of some of her stunner: "A salad is not a meal. It is a style." Or, of poetry: "Generally speaking, it is inhumane to detain a fleeting insight." Or carping about a plant that, it is said, generally makes its own food: "There is, I believe, something that the tiniest bit smug in that statement. And Generally Makes Its Own Food, does it? When you turn across one that Generally Makes Its Own Money, give me a call."

Fran will doubtless appeal to those of the homosexual persuasion. So we say it? Fran's is a finely honed gay humour. "Notes on Trick," a partial parody of Susan Sontag's "Notes on Camp," refers to the person with whom one has sexual congress, usually a stranger. "The mistreatment of Tricks," says Fran, "is the revenge of the intelligent upon the beautiful." And so it goes. That Metropolitan Life proliferates with manifestations of homosexuality (if better say gayness) is a direct result of everything in New York being either produced or provoked by gay culture, with the possible exception of St. Patrick's Cathedral (and there have been stories about that).

An observer of "the scene," Fran has been able to document and make sarcastic comments about just about everything about. That includes strangely deployed pocket handkerchiefs, Halston, how to become a page, the literary possibilities of the vulva, children, disc jockeys, discos, cockroaches and any kind of trend. Fran is the first hip curmudgeon.

Fran herself, from the information with which she has privileged her reader, gives the impression she is not thoroughly likeable. Do not phone Fran twice during dinner time. Never. Her typical day includes lounging in bed, smoking a lot, fantasizing and putting off writing. An agent who phones her from the dread LA is "audibly tan." Her favorite way to wake up is to have "a certain French movie star whisper to me softly at two-thirty in the afternoon that I want to get to Sweden in time to pick up my Nobel Prize for Literature I had better ring for breakfast." It is at politically poignant times as these that one realizes that Fran is no different from anyone else.

Because of her phone bills and her desperate need for a new apartment, Fran would appreciate your shelling out $10.75 for her wonderfully wrought opinions.

August 1978

by Lawrence O'Toole

Nonsense

and Wonder

The Poems and Cartoons

of Edward Lear

EP Dutton (Clarke, Irwin in Canada), 1977, $12.75

Edward Lear

John Lehmann

Scribner's, 1977, $9.95

England's "Nonsense Laureate" and best known for his "Owl and the Pussycat," Edward Lear published his Book of Nonsense years before Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland. By 1877 he had published over 200 illustrated limericks, 20 longer nonsense poems, and many nonsense alphabets. A "drawing-room Grubbs" and reluctant court-jester, he put his own and Tennyson's poems to music and, accompanying himself on the piano, moved generations of Victorian tears and laughter with his hymn-like songs.

As much as he loved his poetry and music, Lear thought of himself as an artist, a "dirty landscape painter," and spent 40 years of his life wandering through Europe, the Mediterranean and India, exiling himself from England and finally settling at San Remo, Italy in 1871. In 1871 he had made natural history drawings for the Zoological Gardens in London, for a J.G. bird books, and even for Darwin's Voyage of the Beagle.

Lear did not acknowledge his homosexuality as frankly as his friend John Addington Symonds, or Charlotte Cushman, whose dinner parties he attended in Rome. From his diaries and letters we can document that his love for men was primary in his life, and that he suffered deep depressions when he felt deserted by Frank Lushington in 1855 and by Hubert Congreve in 1877. He twice thought of marriage, but more as a conventional cure for loneliness than as an expression of love. As his nonsense character the Yonghy: Bonghy: Bo put it, "Will you come and be my wife? ... I am tired of living singly. I'm weary of my life."

His diaries give us glimpses of a darker side. Four "miseries" plagued him: "The Terrible Demon," his epilepsy, which he kept secret from all but his family; "The Morbids," deep depressions, which some of his friends were aware of; "Self-Control," probably his attempt to keep masturbation to a minimum; and an unnamed misery, "the greatest Evil," "one known but unwritten," probably his effort to suppress his sexual desires for men while needing their intimacy. The origin of this "greatest Evil" Lear traces to an incident between himself and his 19 year old cousin Frederick when Lear was 9. Until recently those writing about Lear's life have had difficulty accepting his homosexuality. Angus Davidson, Lear's first biographer, could say that Lushington "held the supreme position" in Lear's heart and that Lear "sincerely desired" a degree of "unreserved intimacy" with him, which may have been a sympathetic and daring statement for 1838, but the blow was softened by Davidson's over-emphasis on Lear's more shallow love for Fousie Bethel. Ten years later George Orwell could gibbly write, "He never married; and it is easy to guess that there was something wrong with his sex life." In 1961 Holbrook Jackson, editor of the Dover edition of Lear's nonsense, subscribed to the arrested development theory: Lear's works "are as sexless as the artistic efforts of a child... his periphrasticism was no pose!" and to prove Lear's "anomaly of prolonged adolescence" he tells us that Lear did not out his wisdom teeth until he was 41! As late as 1967 Philip Hofer, in his introduction to Edward Lear as a Landscape Painter, could write "It is unlikely that Lear was a homosexual" and in the next sentence add that he had "a consuming desire for intimacy and unrestrained communion with Franklin Lushington."

In 1968 Lear's second biographer, Vivien Noakes, not only said that Lear was homosexual but also acknowledged that his "conflict as he fought to suppress" his homosexuality was "a conflict which contributed to his constant state of restlessness and depression." Considering the previous literature, Noakes' recognition of this conflict was a bold step to take and if, as Lear writes in his diaries, this conflict was one of the greatest struggles of his life, then his nonsense, his wandering, and his relationships must be re-examined in the context of his homosexuality.

Thomas Byrom begins his book, Nonsense and Wonder, with a 50 page summary of Lear's life, mostly based on Noakes' biography. He then takes us on a survey of the limericks and longer

"courtship and voyage" poems, from "The Owl and the Pussycat" to "The Table and the Chair," where we see a parade of unlikely couples, suffering from their domestic confinement, their genders undetermined or sex-roles reversed, trying to escape to paradise lands where they can happily be themselves. The couples in these poems were as odd as Lear's own relationships, and he certainly shared their need to escape a confining and hostile world.

What Lear learned from Byrom's study, however, that has not been clear in the biographies is that Lear may have finally rectified, at least in his nonsense, the whole Romantic notion that one could find lasting happiness in a lover. In what Byrom calls the "paradise poems," some of the last he wrote to write, Lear gives us a glimpse of what he may have been searching for. "Love between a couple," Byrom suggests, "is replaced by love among people of a community, and the exile finds a home for himself abroad, in places which lie beyond ordinary comprehension."

Beneath the surface of almost every page of this book, but rarely made explicit, are the connections between the nonsense and Lear's homosexuality. The loneliness we see in nearly all the nonsense was noted in his painful relationships with Frank, Hubert, and other men. Without the nonsense this loneliness might have destroyed him. Living in a repressive culture that saw homosexuality and masturbation as the cause of epilepsy, poems, his argument being that Lear unconsciously used his nonsense to investigate "the full extent of his personal, social and artistic estrangement," and to carry himself, held up by his sense of wonder and mystery, to a vision, however brief, of personal integrity, a sense of belonging, and freedom.

Edward Lear (left) and his friend, Charlotte Cushman, 1857

Byrom's reading of the nonsense is biographical: we learn about the nonsense from Lear's life, about his life from the nonsense. In the introduction to his study of the limericks he tells us that "Lear committed his emotional and spiritual life to this cryptic form."

Byrom guides us through the longer

Lear sought a way to understand and accept his queerness, overcame it, without going "utterly to the mad bad sad" or surrendering to the domestic security of marriage. Like so many Victorian poets, he turned to the unhinged world of children's literature and pictures, where he could express his fears, his sense of the absurd, and his faith in the mysterious. It is a tribute to Lear that he was able to turn the nonsense he wrote to entertain children could also help him survive his miseries, allowing him to envision a land, as Byrom illustrates, where the queer can find a home of their own.

John Lehmann's book, Edward Lear and his World, is mostly interesting for its illustrations. The text is based on the Davidson and Noakes biographies and is a concise summary of his life. This book includes new natural history drawings, a large selection of landscape sketches, some unpublished nonsense cartoons, and reproductions of letters and diary entries. Also of interest is the inclusion of W.H. Auden's sonnet "Edward Lear," an appreciation of Lear that Auden must have been moved to write after reading the Davidson biography in 1939.

by Allen Barabé

Excerpts from Edward Lear's Nonsense by permission of the Houghton Library.

Body Politic/19

The Manhood Ceremony

Ross Berliner
Simon & Schuster, 1978, $8.95

This is the story of a young boy's abduction and rape at the hands of a crazy man named Anvis. It's scary, full of suspense, and of course, timely. As the ultimate in shocking themes, adult-child coercion has become increasingly familiar as an attempt to get closer and closer to a depiction of evil that will shake readers to the core and yet retain the reality of the possible — a plausible wickedness that is all the more fascinating because it is not uncommon homosexual relations between unequal men of the same age has long served as a framework for showing twisted, sadistic neuroses in full flower (Reflections in a Golden Eye, Eustace Chiselm and the Works). Now to evoke a comparable shudder it is necessary to make one of the males a young boy. In the case of Tony Duvert's 1973 novel Strange Landscapes there was a chateau full of boy concubines. The device seems proper enough in the hands of talented writers. As utilized by Ross Berliner it does not.

The jacket copy tells us his name is "a pseudonym for an eminent physician and teacher at an Eastern university who specializes in adolescent medicine." Married, a father, etc., "he writes novels in his spare time." I don't think I go beyond the bounds of objectivity when I judge the moral outlook and unspoken prejudice of this writer to outweigh his abilities at storytelling and reproducing human speech. These he can do, within limits, and as such he satisfies the demands of easy fiction.

But the tacit assumption that all pedophiles are as disturbed as Anvis alarms me, and this is not the worst of it. In Berliner's view homosexuality is a terrible burden to bear, requiring enormous resources for coping. And if you come to learn of it by being abducted and raped, you will find yourself afflicted with its dread curse and suffer the tortures of the damned. This is where he leaves the twelve-year-old Ricky at the story's end, in an abyss of despair and fear, on his way to madness. It is a grave disservice to gay people in general to send forth this image of life into the world. To picture for young readers the boy's late in this fashion is unconsciously malevolent. For in the days of his travelling with the man, Ricky has come to enjoy the sex, and he can't reconcile the pleasure with the evil that Anvis does. Neither, apparently, can the author. The only way out is to go crazy.

Contrasted with all this is the good cop Mike. Mike is gay too and has a couple of heart-to-heart talks with his boss, who has a gay son. This puts the boss in a position to sympathize, if not understand. All that comes of these talks is that Mike feels better for having come out, and that he must be brave and try to bear up. The novel's resolution comes when Mike slays the villain Anvis, an act that gives Mike release from the guilt he feels as gay. It gains for him, too, the blessing of his boss, who understands this act of revenge and will, indeed, lie to cover up for him. Nothing further happens to let Mike (or us) resolve conflicting feelings about pederasty and relations between men closer in age. The villain's love for boys separates him from normal queers like Mike at least as much as his craziness does.

I felt diminished at the end of The Manhood Ceremony, as resignedly depressed as you can get from watching television, which also takes complex issues and reduces them to penny dreadful sensations and formula plots. The characters might as well have labels hanging from their necks, so rigid and fixated are their drives. I don't think it likely that the book will be incongruously successful if and when it should go into paperback, but the very thought of such efficient junk making it to the mass market level is disquieting.

by David Roche

Theatre

The Night They Raided Truxx

Terry Last and Paul Ledoux
The bTheatrical Company
The Turret, Halifax

Bar raids and jail cells are not the usual stuff of comedy, but writers Last and Ledoux have managed to turn an unsavory incident of gay oppression into a lively and occasionally moving evening of cabaret theatre. The production played to full houses during the Annual Conference of Lesbians and Gay Men meeting in Halifax at the end of June.

It was a fast-paced show, ably directed by Rosemary Gilbert Weir and competently produced despite budget restrictions and a less-than-ideal playing space. The mixed-media gadgetry — video screens and overhead projections — occasionally worked, but more often they were merely flickering diversions. Acting varied greatly, not surprising in a mixed cast of amateurs and professionals. The finest performance was given by Rod Murray as the hustler being interrogated by the cops. The scene acts as the emotional centric of the play, a vivid contrast to the upbeat tone of the musical numbers.

The Night They Raided Truxx: Montreal cop (Burt Carr) interrogates Truxx patrolman (Rod Murray)

The first act takes place in the Truxx bar before the raid. We meet a cross-section of men who might frequent a bar: the mock-felting leather duo, the older man, the younger hustler, the upright closet case, the lovers with differing ideas of monogamy, the bitchy queers. These types are sketched in with broad strokes of humour. The audience wanted to laugh, but kept wincing at the bitterness of some of the exchanges. Were the characters blatant exaggerations or impersonations of plausible individuals? We were never sure, and the ambiguity tipped the balance of tone from satiric to melodramatic. A musical number finally rescued us.

Music enlivens Truxx. Most of the songs are entertaining, even brilliant. I liked the "Jack Song," which pokes fun at upright straight men who protect themselves with their symbols of masculinity: "If I can go on if our Jack straps are tight." I also enjoyed the "Pen Song," sung as a harmony chorus by the arrested men in their cell. The most outrageous and original number was the VD doctor in the West drag sashaying about the stage (wielding a gigantic G-tip tied with a bow) and urging the men to "point that thing at me."

The comic exaggeration of this moment was abruptly stopped when Ralph, the older man, refuses to submit to further humiliation. "This has gone far enough," he declares and strides offstage. His defiance is exhilarating and it pointed up what was missing from an otherwise-admirable show.

As long as the musical numbers were funny in a laughing-to-avoid-the-tears tradition, the pace kept up. It was the serious moments which often rang false. After Tommy the hustler is forced into an incriminating confession, the cast croons "Why can't they leave us alone?" like a down-on-the-plantation spiritual. Surely we don't need anti-Bellum wistfulness. We need defiance — and affirmation. The all-cast finale, "Gay Until the Day that I Die," is undoubtedly meant to be rousing, but it left me unmoved. Something was needed which conveyed the spirit of the 2000-strong demonstration in the streets of Montreal following the raid. I don't hear it.

Nevertheless, The Night They Raided Truxx is a substantial advance for gay agitprop theatre in Canada. The play demonstrated a more astute theatrical sense than anything I have yet seen produced in this country. The writers know that audiences would not be pushed too quickly into an unfamiliar political direction. There was no finger-wagging in Truxx, but there was also an absence of passion in crucial places. I'm willing to wager that Last and Leroux will get it right next time.

by Ed Jackson

Behind Truxx

"It became a walking textbook on gay life for the straight actors," observed quiet-spoken Terry Last. He and a few other members of the cast and crew of The Night They Raided Truxx were taking a break from rehearsal to talk to me in the Dalhousie Student Centre cafeteria. "I don't know how the gay audience stood it," added Rosemary Gilbert Weir, smiling. She was remembering the beginning of rehearsals when tension produced an exaggerated prancing and hissing. By the end of the show's run there had been a remarkable change in attitude on the part of everyone who participated. The spirit of goodwill among the cast was palpable to all who saw them socializing together.

The situation arose because an all-gay cast couldn't be found in Halifax. Six of the nine-man cast and all of the production crew of Truxx were heterosexual. Many of them had never worked with openly gay people before, let alone take on a gay role. Actor Rod Murray marvelled at his first reaction to an "orientation" visit of the cast to the Turret Gay Community Centre. "We had to mingle and I was scared shitless. I had lots of the usual ideas about homosexuals and have even called names in my bud. But in two weeks I've changed my head completely and it's really been a great experience for me. Now I feel really relaxed at the Turret."

When St Mary's University withdrew an agreement to allow GAE to use its buildings for the Annual Conference, a protest picket was held. The cast joined the demonstrators and the incident was an eye-opener for some of them. "I was amazed at the names people were calling us. I had just never realized what

Our Image Contributors

Chris Beardsall has tape recorder, with interview. Alan Berube, who is researching the role of early 20th century gay agitator Edward Prime Stevenson, lives in San Francisco. Brian Chase is a gay student in political economy at York University in Toronto. James Wilson is an Orchard Merchant and writer around Toronto. Ian Young, poet and publisher, divides his time between Scarborough, ON and New York City.

Your ordinary image

People used to say homosexuals had a great sense of humour, meaning we tended to deprecate ourselves a lot. The struggle for equal rights for gays has changed that; now it's said we're completely humourless. "AND GOD BLESS UNCLE HARRY AND HIS ROOMMATE JACK (WHO WE'RE NOT SUPPOSED TO TALK ABOUT)" (Aven, 1978, $2.95) is a collection of cartoons from Christopher Street Magazine. It gives us an opportunity to laugh at ourselves and our various idiosyncrasies. Very much a New York book, reflecting the wonderful and outrageous extremes of the Big Apple's gay world, it twinges points a finger at lesbian and gay silliness.

OUR IMAGE

guys have to put up with," reported Bruce Nickson.

For at least one actor, he came out to be very important: he came out during its run. The whole experience provided just the impetus he needed to deal with his uncertain feelings.

Gays in Halifax also learned something as well. The staff at the Turret initially resisted having the play produced there. They didn't like the idea of straights coming into the centre and feared it would drive away their regular customers. There were even rumours of apertion being circulated to stop the play. By the time conference delegates arrived, these rumours had died completely.

The Night They Raided Truxx, from its inception, has been an object lesson in gay/straight cooperation. It all began with the anger of Terry Last. Terry had been in the Truxx bar on the night the Montreal police raided the place, but he was not arrested. When he told his straight friend Paul Ledoux about it later (they both worked at the same place), the idea of a play was born. They talked about it for almost two months before pen was put to paper.

The writing was a totally collaborative process. Paul wrote the lyrics to the songs and provided the high energy to see the project through. Terry was a resource person for Paul. He supplied him with piles of gay literature and enlisted on a gay political line. In fact, Terry's first idea was for a very serious play, and he continued to be worried about the reaction of his gay activist friends. It was Paul's enthusiasm for cabaret and outrageous absurdist comedy which convinced Terry to change the tone. He hasn't regretted it.

Paul Ledoux has had several years' experience in Anglophone theatre in Montreal. He became involved with the Playwrights' Coop in 1975 and wrote a powerful anti-capital punishment play called Beggar's Workshop. This was followed by The Dada Show in which he experimented with the mixed-media techniques later used in Truxx. Terry has an MA in theatre and has thought a lot about gay theatre. He feels there is a real need for it and finally has found the opportunity to see something happen.

The Halifax production of Truxx came about quite accidentally. Paul had returned to his native Halifax to work in ETV and met Rosemary Weir there. When a production to coincide with the gay conference was suggested, he leapt at the opportunity. With Rosemary he formed the theatrical Company and set to work at once. Money for the production came completely from their own pockets and it had cost over $2000 at last count. Paul found that he got more support from the theatrical community in his home town than he did in Montreal. The company hopes next to work on a play about miners called Miller's Jug.

Both Terry and Paul have been encouraged by the response of the audiences who came to see Truxx. Halifaxians appear to have found it educative as well as entertaining. Said actor Murray, "My father came and was touched by it. It opened his eyes." "It touched my father as well," added Paul. Not all of the media reaction was favourable. The reviewer for the Halifax Chronicle-Herald panned Truxx in waspish tones. He especially didn't like the language, finding it "sadly vulgar." The review didn't bother the cast. "Greet," exclaimed Rod Murray, "it's all true. People love to get grossed out. They'll come in droves." And they did.

by Ed Jackson □

Here at the Globe

The position of dance critic at Toronto's Globe and Mail was left vacant a few months ago by the departure of Lawrence O'Toole to the Entertainment pages of the soon-to-be-weekly Maclean's Magazine. Journalists and dance writers from across the country immediately applied for the choice job.

In media circles, the Globe is well-known for its perverse hiring practices and Globe watchers were curious to see it, once again, a journalist with no background in the field would be hired over a knowledgeable critic. A recent incident is revealing.

A young woman entered a Toronto bookstore a few days before the O'Toole resignation. The store specializes in books on theatre and dance, and she was looking for a birthday gift for her boyfriend. Her request was for a "general book on dance for a Toronto writer who wants to begin writing on dance." The person behind the counter at the time, although extremely sceptical of the usefulness of such a book for such a purpose, made a number of suggestions, all of which were rejected. Convinced finally of the futility of the quest, he pulled a book from another shelf and proffered it to his customer. "That's perfect," she exclaimed as she leafed through its numerous colour plates, and off she went with her purchase.

The bookstore clerk? Graham Jackson, freelance dance critic for The Body Politic and other publications, as well as the author of a new book called Dance as Dinos. Considered one of the most informed people writing on dance in Canada today, Graham was passed over in the Globe competition. He works part-time in a bookstore to support himself.

The book with the colour plates? A coffee table biography of opera composer Giuseppe Verdi, who certainly had lots to do with music but very little to do with dance. The boyfriend? Stephen Godfrey, once occasional writer on popular music for the Globe and Mail, and now the newly-appointed dance critic for Canada's national newspaper. □

POSTERS POSTERS POSTERS POSTERS

posterity
265 Queen Street East
Toronto, Ontario M5A 1S8
Phone 861-1851

The Great Escape

Choose from Set Price or La Carte Menu Wednesday to Saturday; enjoy Mexican Food Mondays and Tuesdays
Luncheon daily with Champagne brunch Sundays.
Good wines, Exotic Drinks, Superb Cuisine.

and
The Scooty Dee Dining Lounge
Our recipe for a truly enjoyable lounge:
Quiet music, a relaxed atmosphere, refreshing drinks, and the availability of delicious light snacks.
Simply blend together with good company.

Come to the beautiful Beaches soon and truly "Escape" the ordinary!
Most cards accepted
Reservations preferred.

Alan Blue
President

1971 Queen St. East, Toronto
(Beach Mall)
690-4476

LIFESTYLE VACATIONS

We are an agency created by and for the gay community.
I wish to thank everyone for the tremendous response from our first ad and also from my former G&J travel clients. Tony.

San Francisco
Fl. Lauderdale
Amsterdam
Hong Kong
New York
London
Paris

1 week Athens plus
1 week Rhodes or Corfu from just $799

Pick your tickets or package holidays up from us.
Tony has the right information to make your trip a big success.

Encore Travel

922-1693
193 Carlton Street, Toronto, Ontario M5A 2K7

The Book Nook

2481 Yonge Street (at Castlefield) in Toronto

In Touch	$2.25
Mandate	$2.00
Blueboy	$2.25
Advocate	$.75
Numbers	$3.00

We don't charge over cover price.

Open: 8AM-6PM
(416) 486-8739

Mail orders are now being accepted. Add $10 per magazine for postage and handling. Prompt delivery assured. We buy and sell pocket books, and old copies of Blueboy, Mandate and In Touch.

Custom Furniture Reupholstery

• pride of craftsmanship
• old-fashioned quality
• free estimates
• pickup and delivery
• 10% gay discount

555-1557

Testimonies

Helen Luster's Year of the Horse Poems (Warfoot Books, Box 982, South San Francisco, CA 94080) continues the Pound/Williams-Olsen tradition of Chinese calligraphy and intellectual abstruseness, but concretizes in colloquialism, astrology and jazz. It also continues the tradition of composition by field begun by the Olson school. It's a good book by a mature poet, but it's not particularly original. The imagery isn't especially startling, at least not in the first part of the book. There are some interesting rhythms in poems like "Year of the Horse" which begins

On a mare
little blue horse she's dancing prancing
pricked out in her blue
(and green waves)

but then there are also some less than perfect poems, like the "Three Dark Poems," which manage to exist for me anyway only as stylistic experiments and as parody. The poetry improves as you progress through the book, though, and I found "Pieces," "The Arrow," and "Acorns Water holes" satisfying, stylistically and thematically. It's not a book of love poems, but is worth looking at, as a continuation of trends begun by the Black Mountain School.

Lyn Lifshin's come up with a totally women-oriented book in Some Madonna Poems (White Pine Press, 109 Queenston Street, Buffalo, NY 14210, $15.00) which presents "verbal stills" of women in a sort of mosaic. Images of women in action and the action in women cohere in a thematic whole; the impact is one of a living, breathing force. I particularly liked "Desert Madonna," and must concede Ms Lifshin handles prosody with consummate skill. A good little book.

Judith Kernan's The Jacobs Poems 1968-74 (White Pine, $15.00) is better yet. I just wish the book were longer. (Give us more, please, and soon!) "Water Ceremony," for me, was truly brilliant in its use of imagery to describe the barriers of momentarily uninspired creation:

I cannot make any words
my verbs are eggs with magnets they turn into gerunds, sink and drown, they turn into participles and fall in the water the flame goes out they cannot swim

my adjectives, gray coughing my nouns skeletons, beached fish the rot of my drowned words beautiful with silence...

Truly original, this poem. I also liked her use of personae in poems like "Galatea" and "Letter from the Madwoman" which opens with two exceptional lines:

"I am white-painted woman/ whose shoes are breath," and continues with an extraordinary sequence of metaphors. The entire book is extraordinary, for that matter, and it's worthy of high commendation.

Song Juggling, by Karen Brodine (Berkeley Poets' Workshop and Press) contains some fine metaphors like: "The eyelid is the eye's red tent/ each day my body eats the light" or "is this a narrow/dialectic/ turn," whereby the poet shows her competence in the use of the long line, and the short accentual line developed by Creeley. There's some fine artwork here too.

The long poem "Silver," dedicated to Ms Brodine's grandmother, is among the best in the collection, or any collection.

The silver maple fell all night under wet snow
It leaned down into the pasture, stretched its length
They bucked the tree into jointed chunks,
It lay in its shadow and waited to burn.

Quietly, quietly the poem begins, moving from the familiarity of scenery to an intimate portrait of grandmother — viewed from the eyes of an adult, then from various "points in time" of the speaker growing up. Perspectives shift, compound, deepen. A very moving poem.

Ruth Kleier's For Those Who Cannot Sleep (New Woman Press, Box 56, Wolf Creek, OR 97487) was written in the mid-50s, but wasn't published until 1977. Why? Simply because Ruth Kleier was a lesbian feminist twenty-five years ahead of her time.

Thematically, it's Ruth's testimonial of coming to terms with woman-consciousness in days prior to CR groups, movements, and all. A Dante-esque pilgrimage through the dark forest of self is undertaken; the journey leads upwards, but the pilgrim is never certain where. Perhaps that theme typifies shift, compound, deepen. Ruth's isolation — one can only speculate. The book is characterized by an apparent simplicity (vocabulary, traditional line-length) disguising a significant intellect. Stylistically tame, but emotionally very intense. "The Third Journey" is worth special notice.

Savory Jones' Flannel Morning (The Vanity Press, P.O. Box 15064, Atlanta, GA 30333, $3.00) falls as a cohesive narrative poem, but is nonetheless a superb chronicle of lesbian love. It's usually a sequence of love poems written to about an academic "Dr V" with whom the "I" falls madly in love.

Witty, worried, angry, and joyous, it tells the sad, mad, but glad story of the love affair. To find poetry of wit paired with lyrics of personal sensitivity, in one book, is really quite rare. Nonetheless, the poet's attempts to use colloquialism, archaism, and academic jargon don't quite work. Jones is at her best when she's most personal — and her worst when she affects the intellectual. If you can ignore stanzas like

The spiritual condition of the woman I love isn't so peachy-cream this week.
I fear she may lie to yonder convent to cast the vows of nunnery

and other such unrhymatical complications, the book will bear a fairly close reading. Parts of it, rereading.

Kira Reith's Poems for My Mother and the Women I Have Loved (Second Coming Press, Box 31249, San Francisco, CA 94131, $2.00) is very definitely a first book; lots of flawed poems, lots of unexplained and obscure lines, and yet it contains some memorable lines, images and stanzas, for all that. Stanzas like

Drop me in a wild field of rattling cats and let the sun beat on me as if I were a yellow hat
bent over the ditches of my homeland
Furrow me into the dust...

which are really quite remarkable. Prior to that, sharp, focused. There's something engaging and personal about Reith's poetry which is truly sensitive and fine. If you ignore the excesses, the beginner's tendency to exaggerate, you'll find this little book charming.

by Judith Creeley
August 1978

Reperoire of 15 salads & numerous splendours

The Cow Cafe
406 Dupont St
Toronto 961 8341
Lunch 12.2.30
Dinner 6.10 pm
Closed Mondays

Curry-ratatouille - hummus-seefood crêpes-spanakopitta

Especially fine pastries & delicious desserts

A MAGAZINE OF LESBIAN CULTURE AND POLITICS

Subscription: $8.00 for four issues
Sample copy: $2.75 by mail
Checks payable to:
Toronto Publications
70 Bloor St
New York, NY 10014

We are looking for graphic and written contributions. We pay for everything we print. Write for details.

ART • POLITICAL THEORY • CONTEMPORARY LESBIAN LIVES • ART • HUMOR • HEALTH CARE • MOVIES • BOOKS • LESBIAN EVENTS • GAY COMMUNITY • GAY POLITICS • GAY CULTURE • GAY HISTORY • GAY LITERATURE • GAY MUSIC • GAY THEATRE • GAY FILM • GAY PHOTOGRAPHY • GAY VIDEO • GAY ART • GAY LITERATURE • GAY MUSIC • GAY THEATRE • GAY FILM • GAY PHOTOGRAPHY • GAY VIDEO • GAY ART

DYKE
A QUARTERLY

ANALYSIS OF LESBIAN CULTURE AND POLITICS FEATURING ESSAYS, ANALYSIS, GAY COMMUNITY, GAY POLITICS, GAY CULTURE, GAY HISTORY, GAY LITERATURE, GAY MUSIC, GAY THEATRE, GAY FILM, GAY PHOTOGRAPHY, GAY VIDEO, GAY ART

Come dancing in Mississauga

A Summer traffic (licensed) sponsored by Gay Equality Mississauga
serving the lesbian and gay community in the Peel Region

Friday, Aug 18

at the Unitarian Congregation of South Peel
84 South Service Road
(South of DEW just east Huronario St — Highway 10)

For further information call
Gayline West
791-6974

osborne gallery
717 osborne street winnipeg
(204) 453 2873

wishes to hear from artists working with watercolours, oils, acrylics, etc., also from printmakers. We are planning an exhibition by gay Canadian artists for early 1979. Subject matter need not be gay in content. Please write, with brief resume of work, exhibitions to date, or phone weekdays 11:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The Ivory Tunnels

Small Press Books

I've decided to use part of this month's column for a bit of complaining about the tawdry ethics of certain gay periodicals in the matter of book reviewing. The procedure followed by these publications is that when a publisher or writer sends in a book to be reviewed, he is sent a breezy note suggesting that he ask someone he knows to do a review, and that the writer or publisher then "send along" the result, which the magazine will then publish. The outcome, of course, is a typeset chorus of praise by the friends of the various authors.

As an "author," publisher and reviewer, I've run into this shabby practice a number of times now (not only from gay magazines), and have come to realize that some editors make a habit of it. A number of books I've published have gone unreviewed by particular periodicals because I've declined to take part in a cosy little system that defrauds the readers and is vastly unfair to authors and reviewers alike.

The more ethical gay publications do not do this of course; their editors are real editors, not just compilers of publisher-commissioned puff jobs. But a couple of the best-known papers seem to be nothing wrong with it. If we are to have a press of any dignity or honesty, these incestuous games must go.

I've recommended before Sidney Smith's little books of line drawings. His latest is Menchild ($2.50 from the artist, 1502 President St., Brooklyn, NY 11213, USA), a charming story about a young boy piped away by a child Pan into a wood where he "casts away the rags and devices of slavery," joins a friendly pagan ceremony, and smokes a leafy pipe together with other assorted youngsters and forest sprites. From the same address comes Pat Macgregor's Children of the Night ($3), a series of prayer-like invocations of idealized boys, infused with paganism, pacifism, and an awareness of manhood's cruelties.

Walt Curtis' Mala Noche ($1.75 from the author, 133 NW 18th St., Portland, OR 97209, USA) is a story about a couple of young Mexicans, Johnny and Pepper, "illegal aliens" in the U.S., trying to survive, like thousands of young Mexicans, Indians and others, in a society that has no place for them. They are befriended by an infatuated storekeeper who helps them out, lets them drive his car (into a ditch — "I tell Pepper he drives like he fucks"), worries about them, feeds them, takes them to movies, and sometimes seems more confused than they are.

Mala Noche is a realistic and compassionate story, honestly showing the storekeeper's sometimes conflicting feelings, and the dignity as well as the hopeless position of the boys. Curtis' writing is hardly known outside his native Pacific North-West; it deserves to be.

The first part of Mary Beth Knechtel's novella The Goldfish That Exploded ($2.95, Pulp Press, Box 48806, Stn Benelli, Vancouver) is about a married professor called Cayo who ventures into a gay disco, fucks out and ends up with a couple of drag queens. There are little spoofs of Gertrude Stein (who is caricatured as Marine General I.D. Fixe), Bill Bissett and others. But when, about two thirds the way through the book, our hero drowns and is eaten by sharks, the tale falls apart with him. The Tom Wolfe drawings are by J. Thomas Osborne.

Eric Bentley's play about Oscar Wilde and Lord Alfred Douglas, "Lord Alfred's Lover," is printed in the Spring Canadian Theatre Review, #3 from 2008 Administration Studies, York University, Downsview, Ont.). The familiar tragedy is seen through the aged Lord Alfred, and we are witness of the mediocrity of the authorities, who refused to lessen the ailing Oscar's prison sentence, even when he "repented" his sexual heresies. "Only the worthless," Oscar comes to realize, "can be reformed, and he resolves to live 'unsaved, impenitent... Obedient to be shamed by a shameful world.' An interesting play dealing with an aspect of Wilde often glossed over. Another recent play script, Doric Wilson's lively, controversial The West Street Gang is now available from TOSOS, 115 Bedford St., New York, NY 10014, USA, at $6.50.

Sal Fariella's Thieves to Flesh (2.50, Manifest Destiny Books, Box 57, Dorchester Center Stn., Dorchester 02124, USA) is a collection of intense, sexual and disquieting poems. Ron Schreiber, another gay poet whose reputation is growing, has two new collections of work that is more muted and wider-ranging than Fariella's. False Clues is $3 from a new gay publisher, Arcane Books, 323 N. Geneva St., Ithaca, NY 14850, USA. Against That Time (bound with Jeffrey Schwartz's eloquent Contending With the Dark) is $3.50 from Alice James Books, 138 Mt. Auburn St., Cambridge, Mass. 02138, USA.

Steven Abbott's poems can be funny or ferocious, personal or political, or all of these together. Wrecked Hearts (2.95) is his first collection and includes an amusing cartoon strip about Rimbaud. A longer poem, Transmuting Gold is 75¢. Both from Dancing Rock Press, 930 Shields, San Francisco, CA 94132, USA.

After what seems an immoderately long wait, the first issue of Paragraph: A Quarterly of Gay Fiction has arrived, containing six stories of varying quality, each illustrated by a different artist. The drawings of Dennis Forbes and Jim Thompson are particularly handsome. It's $3 from Antares Foundation, Box 14051, San Francisco, CA 94114. Finally, Tom Hume, author of Jonathan Loved David, offers an annotated bibliography, Homosexuality in Biblical Times, for $1. Tom's address is 148 Third Ave., Apt. 3D, New York, NY 10011.

The gremlins invaded last month's column. In my review of Eddie Suckler's novel, I said that Billy Crossit was "a Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist and has affairs..." This showed up as "his affairs". I wrote that Suckler "should at least have known better than to employ" a certain device. "Employ" got changed to "avoid." And it was the morality of Daniel Curzon's fables that should have been described as squalid, not the moralist, who I can testify is a fine and clearly fellow.

by Ian Young

BEST FILM OF THE YEAR

"A Bigger Splash" — Jack Hazan's brilliant, fictionalized documentary of some formative experiences in the creative life of a British artist, David Hockney, during the years 1970-1973. The film is outstanding for its nearly perfect stylistic recreation of the deceptively placed surfaces of the painter's canvases, as well as in conveying the humour, irony, and theatricality which go to make up Hockney's sensibility.

No film I have seen this year has left me with quite so many vivid sensual images to cherish, eg the love scene between Peter Schlesinger and friend, a moment of rare stillness and silence in which Hazan's camera follows the naked Peter as he slowly follows his way from a night-time California pool to a patio window where he staves vacantly at several friends sitting round a table inside.

— Jack Rabuscio, Gay News (Britain)

COMING SOON!

Look better...

Relax and pamper yourself with a facial treatment, or have unwanted hair removed permanently.

Call your certified and experienced electrologist for a free, personalized consultation.

Karl (416) 967-0095

Something special for everyday.

Bread and other baked delights.

UPPER CRUST
Naturally Goodness and taste.

The Upper Crust • 1099 Yonge Street • Toronto

Vitamins and supplements
Fruit and vegetables

Take-out counter

Cheese shop Bakery

NATURAL FOODS

17 St. Nicholas Street

921-4057

Free 25-minute parking at Cargo Canada nearby

the Jewellery Factory offers you fabulous jewellery made in our own workshop

SAVE 30% to 50%
on Jewellery, Diamonds & Watches, anytime

427 Queen Street West
(at Spadina) Toronto
Telephone: 368-3753

Not happy with your living arrangements?

Looking for a self-contained room?
Find that apartment lonely?

Join one of our gay "families"!

Parliament Street

Fully self-contained bachelorettes
Private bathroom
Fridge, stove and sink in each unit
Nine units fully renovated with modern furnishings
At Wellesley, minutes from Yonge
Start at $40 per week

Victor Avenue

Stove, fridge and sink in each room
Free use of washer and dryer Steps from Broadway, two blocks north of Gerrard
11 units — start at $30 per week

Call Don (465-3287, Ron (465-8919)
or Hoddy (928-9009)

Monitor

moos-tor (moos'-ter) n. One that cautions, admonishes or reminds. Any device used to record or control a process. (In: x) To check, to test, to keep track of, to scrutinize, to keep watch over, to direct. (Latin, one who warns, from monere, to warn.)

George Jonas, Canadian playwright, poet and popularizer of crime, has a wondrously naive — and self-centred — view of human nature. Outlining homosexuality would be pernicious, he writes in the June Canadian Lawyer, but enshrining it as a basic human right would be an intolerable tyranny. He objects, in an I'm-so-good tone, to any law which makes it impossible for him to do something he would not think to do — which is discriminate on the grounds of race, color, creed or sexual orientation. Unfortunately, not everyone can guarantee the sanctimonious goodwill with which Jonas cloaks his objection to gay rights measures; and Jonas conveniently overlooks how little goodwill — and how much the force of law — has done for blacks in the current generation. Jews in decades past, women in recent years, and even for the Québécois.

The editors and writers of National Review are delightfully perverse in their dealings with what used to be dependable conservative aversions. Take homosexuality. Abhorrent? Used to be. But Clare Booth Luce — right-wing curmudgeon, former ambassador and playwright, current Henry Luce widow and anti-rights woman — believes that gay sex is small potatoes in the face of an even greater global horror.

The problem is overpopulation: Luce calls it the "only really grave problem mankind faces." All other problems — nuclear war, bankrupt cities, deterioration of the urban environment and the rural ecology, terrorism, the loss of privacy — are mere symptoms; the cure is a birth pill which will ensure that 80% of children born are male.

"Obviously," understates Luce in the July 7 NR, "a population imbalance between females and males would result in many sociological changes": polyandrous marriage, quarrels between men over women, even women — alas — being in a position to dictate better terms for their living conditions. "And, almost certainly, homosexuality would increase, but whatever the adverse effects on society, it would be infinitely more tolerable than the catastrophes mankind is doomed to endure." Backdoor respectability, in a masculine new world.

Also in the area of gay rights legislation, US history professor Paul Robinson argues more persuasively and less emotionally in the June 3 New Republic that anti-discrimination ordinances "are among the most nonsensical ever put on the books."

Robinson believes that the pressure for gay rights legislation stems from a gay need for legal visibility, for a sanctuary of law which would allow men to talk about the men they love and women to talk about the women they love without worrying about a prudish boss forcing their dismissal. His argument is sympathetic.

But his conclusion is impossibly bleak: he says that the anti-gay movement, based on a pathological inability of its adherents to see gays as anything more than creatures with "penises in mouths and anuses", cannot be stopped. His advice: stick to the closets; they're more comfortable than the streets.

When the early-70s film Steel Yard Blues was being filmed, actress Jane Fonda refused to use the word "queer" in a short scene; father Henry Fonda has given financial and vocal support to gay rights.

But savvy rider Peter remains the bad boy of the family; in the Canadian-made film Highbalder, Fonda the younger plays a semi-retired semi-trailer driver who suffers the indignity of being labelled a "tag" because he wears flashy boots, and whose only recourse — to prove his manhood — is to beat the chap who abused him from the head with a tire iron. Flex, flex.

The alarm has been sounded in the June-July issue of The American Spectator, a small-circulation but highly influential journal of the right: those pesky Episcopalians, who've dared support black civil rights, condemn far-shore wars, update their liturgy and admit women to the priesthood, are ready to lift with priesthood for homosexuals.

Agents for this vile transformation of churchly mores, says A. James McAdams, are the church publications The Episcopalians (leading a subtle campaign over the years for societal change) and Integrity (the very vocal and at times astonishingly uninhibited organ of the gay set). It's a conspiracy, says elitist McAdams, working "through folksy down-to-earth appeals on the level of the grass roots." The people — especially blacks, militants, women and gays — have no place in the hierarchy of religion; to permit such infiltration "only makes a mockery of religious authority."

Sometimes a delight in the midst of distress. In the May issue of Be Alive, an otherwise trendy self-styled "magazine for today's woman", there is a three-page article, excerpted from the book For Better, For Worse, which for the most part is supportive of lesbians. The message is that lesbians can probably teach straight women something about the beauty of honest love.

The article is an oasis of decency in a publication which otherwise seems fixated on posing, preening and pining a woman in order to make snaring a man as easy as possible.

Elaine Noble, lesbian State Representative in Massachusetts, is running for the US Senate and the glossy mag Us finds her squeaky-clean enough for a profile in its July 11 issue. She is pronounced a "serious, savvy politician" who is now accepted as just "one of the boys" in the State House. On that litmus-test issue, youth sexual rights, Noble takes the safest way out: "I don't believe in sex with minors — either gay or straight." Mainline politics it may be, but Noble is up to run against Republican incumbent Edward Brooke, which means conservative Black versus moderate lesbian. It's ready-made for the media: symbolic minority personalities battling for a bigger piece of the pie.

Something to watch for: Our very own TV programming. In an article in the July 3 issue of Newsweek, a new breed of videomaker, Michael Shamberg, predicts the use of a domestic satellite to "beam homosexually oriented programming to the nation's largest gay communities." Could he just be trying to avoid contaminating the other airways? □

GAY USSR

Angelo Pezanna's one-man demonstration in Moscow for gay rights didn't endear him to the modern Czars.

After all, everyone knows there are no homosexuals in the Soviet Union.

by Angelo Pezanna translation by Walter Bruno

Article 121 of the Soviet Criminal Code punishes consensual homosexual acts with five years imprisonment, and with eight years imprisonment for homosexuals with minors and dependents. Introduced by the Stalin regime in 1934, the article has most often been used as a pretext for actions against political opponents who happen to be gay.

Such was the case of Armenian filmmaker Sergei Paradjanov. Noted for his support for the rights of national minorities in the USSR and for his commitment to the democratization of politics in the country, Paradjanov was victimized for his sexuality and imprisoned in 1973.

At the end of 1977 rumours spread throughout Europe alleging that Paradjanov's "mental faculties" were failing, and even that he was already dead. An international campaign was launched to defend Paradjanov, partly out of fear that the Soviet authorities were preparing public opinion for their next move against the film-maker.

As his part in that campaign, Angelo Pezanna, Alternate Deputy for the Radical Party in the Italian Parliament and Director of the Italian gay liberation review, FUORI, went to Moscow and staged a solo demonstration against the anti-gay laws in the USSR and in favour of Paradjanov's release. Despite resistance from organizing officials, Pezanna also spoke on Paradjanov's behalf at the Venice Biennale, the biennial international art fair which, in 1977, focussed on dissent as its theme. This article is Pezanna's diary of the events.

On December 3, 1977, undoubtedly as a result of Pezanna's courageous gesture, the central newspaper of the Italian Communist Party — largest in the western world — published a statement denouncing Article 121 and the repression of homosexuals in the USSR and elsewhere, and called for Paradjanov's immediate release. The French Communist Party published a similar appeal shortly thereafter.

Late in December, Soviet authorities announced that Paradjanov had been released. A Russian correspondent in Iran, however, has reported to the Committee for the Liberation of Sergei Paradjanov that no one has seen the dissident since August 1977. There is speculation that he may have died.

Modern Czars are not limited to the Soviet republics. Experience has taught me that they rule just about everywhere. In Moscow, as in Venice, as in Rome. But when telling a story it's a good idea to take a few steps back in order to let the reader in on a few details which weren't published in the newspapers.

It all begins in September 1977: The staging of the music section of the Biennial of Dissent is being handled by Paolo, a Radical Party comrade. We meet in Rome and he informs me that in the film section there will be a day dedicated to Sergei Paradjanov, the Russian film director imprisoned in 1973 and sentenced in 1974 to five years in jail for homosexuality, on the basis of Article 121 of the Soviet Penal Code. Paolo invites me to Venice to see if anything can be organized and makes me an appointment with the chairman of the Biennial, Carlo Ripa di Meana. In the meantime, thinking over the whole question, I'm tempted by the idea of staging a demonstration in Moscow to demand Paradjanov's release. I arrive in Venice with the whole project in mind, and proceed to discuss it with Ripa di Meana, who not only agrees with it, but assures me that I will be allotted a press conference on the 25th of November, that he is prepared to contribute financially to the trip, and that he will have an official letter from the Biennial prepared for me, to let it be known that the initiative not only enjoys their support, but is part of the official programme.

Now, this entire story is marked by a striking naïveté on my part, I must admit. Obviously, my press conference will never appear on the Biennial's programme, nor will any official letter arrive. But who was going to worry about these questions then, with a gentleman like Ripa di Meana? So I leave Venice and begin taking the necessary steps for an entry visa for the Soviet Union.

Autumn interval: Going to the USSR isn't especially easy. One imagines that all one has to do is go to Alitalia or Aero-Flot, buy a ticket, and catch the first available flight. That may be true for a Big Industrialist or a Big Communist. For us ordinary people the individual visa takes at least two months and the ticket costs twice as much — and I'm in a hurry. So I join an organized tour and reserve for the Moscow — Leningrad, 365,000 lira, 8-day all-inclusive, leaving on the 14th of November. When the visa arrives, I forget all about conjectures and consequences, which might persuade me to do the opposite, and pack my bags. But how to get organized? Will there be any stationery stores in

This article was originally published as "Un Gay alla Corte dello Zar" (A Gay in the Court of the Czars) in the Winter 1977/Spring 1978 issue of FUORI.

Walter Bruno is a gay activist who recently returned to Toronto from a year's study in Aix en Provence, France.

"Will there be any stationery stores in Moscow? Hi. I'd like two big pieces of cardboard — you know, the kind you can hang from your neck — some string and a felt pen. Oh, you don't have any. Well, I'll have to find another solution. The linen!..."

Moscow. (Hi. I'd like two big pieces of cardboard — you know, the kind you can hang from your neck — some string and a felt pen. Oh, you don't have any. Well, I'll have to find another solution. The linen! But of course, two towels can nicely substitute for two pieces of cardboard.) Boots, sheep-skin coat, turtle-neck sweater, an extra pair of eyeglasses (one never knows.) and on Sunday, November 13, we're off!

Moscow, Monday, November 14: After squeezing the tube of toothpaste and having the bicarbonate analyzed (might be cocaine), Soviet Customs ask me what the admittedly enormous marking pen is for. To which I promptly reply to write postcards with They don't bother seizing it, and so, OK, I can pass. I arrive at my hotel at seven o'clock Moscow time.

The hotel is the National, a combination of fin-de-siècle and Liberty style with art deco renovations. Very pretty, and it's right in front of Red Square, the view is fascinating. While everyone runs out to have dinner, I prepare my battle plan in my room and organize the phone calls I have to make immediately. I call Cristiano del Rocca, a junior correspondent stationed here. He's very kind and invites me to his office, which is located in a very high building in the midst of several other identical buildings. Only foreigners live there, a good number of them are reporters. I get off at the ninth floor, but I stay there only for a minute: one can't have a conversation up there for fear of electronic surveillance. It's best to go down to the street. I explain my project to Cristiano and he gets awfully worried, tells me I'm crazy, that they'll arrest me, that nothing like I have been seen before. I'm not considering the consequences, he says, but better think it over — in short, he quite frightens me about my immediate prospects, as all the foreign correspondents will do before the demo.

Thanks to Cristiano, who supplies me with everybody's name and telephone number, I spend Monday evening and Tuesday until 4:30 pm going around knocking bells, meeting all the foreign reporters in Moscow. Despite my fears, which get bigger every time I talk to someone, I have decided to hold a press conference in the lobby of the hotel at five o'clock on Tuesday. Do come, per piacere, bring photographers, and if you know anything about the situation, don't lose sight of me, bitte, cable your article immediately; svp be sure the photos are good!

Moscow, Tuesday, November 15: I am keeping in constant touch with Rome and Turin, where Carlo Sismundo has transformed his house for three very long days and nights into a FUORI headquarters. I reach Marco Panella in Rome and he tells me that, at the exact moment I'm holding my Moscow press conference, he and Emma Bonino will be doing the same in Rome — and this story has a happy ending, it's because of Marco's initiative. In fact, Marco and Emma take the Rome press corps know that, if I am arrested, the entire Parliament will be involved in the confrontation, since I belong to a parliamentary group. This might explain the fact that the Soviet authorities later take 24 hours to decide my fate.

And so to my press conference in Moscow. Here we are in the hotel lobby and I'm literally surrounded by some 40 KGB men, all identical, all bearded, none reassuring to look at. Oh, but they do smile at me — that smirk which we gays know so well. They might have been thinking "What an exaggeration, this display of force for a taggot! What do you want us to do?" In actual fact, this taggot did manage — with a subtle dose of fear and tension — to carry it off. News of our press conference appeared in publications around the world, drawing attention to Sergei Paradjanov and to Article 121, exactly as we had planned it!

They eye me and give each other little pokes just like at home. Meanwhile, the journalists arrive and the conference begins. It doesn't last long, though, a desk clerk soon shows up and tells me kindly that we can't stay in the lobby (an immense hall, and despite our presence, half-empty), that a party of tourists is due in, but that I can "receive my friends" in my room. We willingly go upstairs, where the conference takes place, and I explain to the Italian and foreign correspondents the reasons for my actions — more or less what was reported in the next day's papers. We go back downstairs about a half hour later and, reaching the hotel entrance, I hang the towel from my neck — the one on which I had written, in English, "Freedom for Homosexuals in the USSR; Sergei Paradjanov, Art. 121." The LIFE photographer takes several shots and everything ends there — to the great disappointment of a few reporters, waiting for some sort of "event" to provide "color" for their articles.

Instead, precisely because orders from above hadn't yet arrived, nothing happens. I call Rome and Turin and let them know that I'm about to phone Andrei Sacharov to say that I'd like to meet him to see whether I can involve him in my protest, and that tomorrow I'll take a nice walk in downtown Moscow with my towel-placed, to see how the authorities react.

Paradjanov with his towel in Moscow. Right: with friends in Rome during FUORI's fifth national conference.

So I call Sacharov. Mr. Hello, Mr. Sacharov? I'd like to meet you to discuss Sergei Paradjanov and Article 121. Could I come up to see you? Sacharov: You said you're Italian, but what you're talking about? Me: Is that possible? (I briefly outline the history of the case and tell him about my press conference.) Sacharov: You said you're Italian, but exactly who are you? Me: (lying shamelessly — but I realize I'll have little chance of seeing him, since he isn't suddenly interested in the topic of anti-gay repression) I am a member of the Italian Parliament! Sacharov: I'll expect you tomorrow at two pm, at my place. I look at the clock: 10 pm, and a whole day's tension is suddenly dissolving. Realizing how infinitely tired I am, I collapse on the bed, falling into a serene sleep, the sleep of the just.

Wednesday, November 16, still in Moscow: If I said that I was followed, it would be inexact. In actual fact, scarcely had I set foot outside my hotel than I found myself flanked on the left by a giant watchdog — flanked, that is, elbow to elbow, shoulder to shoulder.

Now I'm reasonably smart, so I don't for a moment believe that I'd caught the eye of a gay Muscovite. The thought that he was from the KGB rapidly cleared up the picture. And though the right side of my body was able to move freely, the left side was under the total control of this mastiff. In this fashion we walked around together like Siamese twins to kill the half-hour until two o'clock; then I halted a taxi and gave the driver Sacharov's address. The KGB agent murmured something to him as well, and we finally took off, followed by a long black car (like in the movies) like in the movies). Sacharov lives on the top floor of a building on Moscow's ring road. He's a man who looks many years older than he really is. He's hunched over, speaks with a stutter, and his hands display the kind of cracked skin that results from exposure to the cold. Sacharov observes me for a bit while I explain the purpose of my visit. He consults the Soviet Penal Code to check the accuracy of what I've said, snorts a "not good" in reference to Article 121, and says that this battle is not his own, that it might undermine the political work he's been doing. Then he comes out with that familiar sentence: "I'm not sympathetic to homosexuals, I'm married and have a wife and sons." Okay, so I won't get him to join the fight, but I'm not anxious to end the conversation at this point. I continue asking questions about gays in the USSR, and to a certain extent, Mr. Sacharov unwittingly reveals that, when he said he knew nothing of Paradjanov, he had lied shamelessly.

Just think, I had just learned from Sacharov that he had received several phone calls last spring from two gays who had been arrested, prominent celebrities and impeccable dissident that he is — to take a position in favour of Paradjanov and against Article 121. But the wise dissident had done well not to invite them over because, he explains, he was able to discover later that they were spies for the KGB. In what way, Mr. Sacharov, were you able to discover this? No reply.

At least we now know that in Moscow, too, there is an embryonic gay movement, even if made up of very few people, and that sooner or later it will make its presence felt. Good luck, you two unknown Moscow gays! Returning to the hotel, I no sooner set foot inside my room than I'm requested to report immediately to Intourist, which is located in a building right next door to the National. In the Intourist Office I find an enormous rectangular table, behind which is sitting yet another watchdog, who solemnly intones: "You are officially expelled from the Soviet Union for having: a) committed an act of homophobia; and b) seriously disturbed public order. You shall not be able to set foot again in the USSR. This is the position of our government, you needn't bother commenting." Ah no, Gentlemen Rulers of the Soviet Union, I also have something to say, just as "official" as what you've said, and here it is: Me. A press conference is not an act of homophobia, but one of many ways of expressing one's opinions, and communicating by means of a towel hanging from the neck is not a serious disturbance of public order, but one form of protest against a law which violates personal freedom. They: What rights? Me: Those of homosexuals. They: You are the first homosexual we have met; in the Soviet Union there are none, and if there were any, it would be necessary to eliminate them all. Me: Like Hitler! Like Mussolini! They: On this subject, they were both entirely correct. Me: Good for them — good for you all! They: In Italy, you are involved in opposition politics. But what you were doing there wasn't an embryo was it? Why have you come here to stick your nose into other people's business?

(The author describes his return to Italy and his efforts to publicize the Paradjanov case and the situation of homosexuals in the USSR. He discovers that officials of the Venice Biennale resent

“Our battle is against moral attitudes”

An interview with Angelo Pezzana

The gay movement in Italy produces two major journals. One, FUORI, began publishing in December 1971. The name means “out” in Italian and is also the acronym of the publishing organization, the Fronte Unitario Omosessuale Rivoluzionario Italiano, the country’s first gay group. The other is the independent journal, Lambda, which started in November 1976.

Below, Angelo Pezzana discusses the Italian gay movement with Toronto artist Bruce Eves in an interview recorded at the Renaissance Bookstore in Turin on May 30, 1978.

Eves: It is interesting that there is a direct association here between the gay movement and a political party. In North America that doesn’t exist, and as far as I know it doesn’t in the rest of Europe either. Could you describe FUORI and its relation to the Radical Party?

Pezzana: Well, I think the situation in Italy is very peculiar because it is the only country, I think in the world, in which an official political party has not only accepted but in part made up of the gay liberation movement. FUORI started in 1971 — the gay liberation movement in Italy started in 1971 — and we stayed alone until 1974. In those three years we formed many small groups in about ten or twelve major towns in Italy. The work we did in those groups was through consciousness-raising, discussions and demonstrations, but with very few people involved: in Italy, the Vatican and the clerical mentality is still very strong. We have no laws against homosexuality, and in general gay people say, “Yes, we are not free, we are not happy, but we have no laws against us, so it could be worse.”

Then in 1974 we went into all the groups formed by FUORI were dying — dying because they were very closed. They had no contact with the outside, with other forces, even with political forces. So at that time we decided to contact the Radical Party, which was not yet represented in parliament but was an active movement, generally of alternative people — feminists, non-violent activists, people fighting for divorce (which was not legal in Italy), for abortion, people fighting for civil rights in Italy in a radical movement. We asked during the congress in November 1974 that they accept FUORI as an official group forming part of the party, like the others. This decision we gained access to all the offices of the Radical Party in Italy — there are about two hundred. We now have forty-five groups, even in the provincial towns where it is difficult for gay people to come out and work politically.

There are two kinds of conservatives in this country: the Christian Democrats are officially and openly clerical and the Communist Party are unofficially clerical in the same way. Very moralist, they think that the family and heterosexuality are the only way. During the elections of 1976 the Radical Party had four deputies elected. The time between election is five years, but our deputies decided to stay in parliament only two and a half years; after that, four non-elected members will take their place, and I will be one of them. So, in December I will be the first open homosexual in the parliament in Italy.

FRONTE UNITARIO OMOSESSUALE RIVOLUZIONARIO ITALIANO

Eves: What specific problems exist for gay people in Italy?

Pezzana: As I said before, there are no legal constraints, but we have a sort of costume of moral habits, behaviour which is very clerical, which means the moralist. With the Catholic Church, you can commit any kind of sin, but you can say, “I have sinned, and I feel guilty.” You can be absolved of anything, and this is the moral sanction which governs all of Italy. Gay people still live in ghettos: in the big cities we have clubs and bars but, in their modern way, they’re just the same as the old ghettos, which were lavatories, parks, streets and so on. It’s the same. We don’t have a political consciousness, except for a small minority of homosexuals who are politicized. Gay pride is still an abomination, not yet a lifestyle.

Eves: What forms of open repression are there from, say, the government or the church?

Pezzana: Repression is very strong from the police and the family. The family is Catholic, and young people stay in it until marriage. I think that 80% of gay people still continue to live with the family, because they don’t marry, of course. It is very unusual for a young man or woman to go out and live on his or her own, or with other friends.

There is much harassment from the police, and it is very rare for gay people being harassed to have the courage to ask for their rights. The police are fighting against us, not against delinquency. In Turin we have attacks almost every evening from what are they called, you know, groups who congregate and say, “What will we do tonight? Go dancing, have a pizza and beat up queers.” This is the program for the evening.

Eves: There was a group in San Francisco. I’m not sure if it still exists, called the Pink Panthers...

Pezzana: Yes, we have done the same. We were loaned a small bus and about seven or eight of us made some interventions into attacks in two parks here in Turin. And in fact, we have saved homosexuals from attacks. “Oh thank you, your arrival was very quick, bye-bye.” That’s it. It is very difficult and tiring.

Eves: Are the clubs raided? Is the newspaper censored?

Pezzana: We have never had trouble from the establishment, mostly because the gay papers have a very small circulation and so do not represent a danger for the establishment. The gay bars, clubs and dances are not raided because they are very few and, like all gay clubs and gay dances, are controlled by the police, and practically all of the owners are heterosexual. They are not advertised at all.

But we are advertising for a new club which we rent only for Sunday evenings. We have started, like two or three clubs in Florence, Milan and Rome, to have a place which is not exploitative and which has shows made by gay people. It is a place for both men and women together.

Eves: What about gay youth?

Pezzana: We have a group in FUORI called the students for sexual liberation collective. The members range in age from 14 to 18; they meet and discuss and make interventions into the schools with debates, discussions and the like. They are few, but it’s a start. But I think that the problems are much worse for older people because the sexual roles are still very strong. In fact, it is very rare to see older people in the clubs. Only if you are young and well-dressed.

Eves: Is it possible for someone who is openly gay to be a teacher?

Pezzana: Yes. Ninety-nine percent of the gay teachers say, “I’ll do something in the schools I will lose my job.” It is not true. We have made presentations in the schools, put on by gay teachers. A friend of ours, who teaches literature in Turin, had a meeting with students, parents and teachers two years ago and said: “I am gay, and I would like to have a meeting with FUORI and all the parents and students to discuss homosexuality.” The majority agreed, saying it was a good idea. He never lost his job. The problem in Italy is that the role of gay people is still to be closed. We need an Anita in Italy, a woman who she is good promotion to encourage gay self-awareness.

Eves: I get the impression that there is a great deal of conflict between gay groups in Italy.

Pezzana: All the gay groups here are working not against a common enemy but against other gay groups with different ideologies. We are all still prisoners of ideology. All of the groups in Italy started from FUORI because FUORI was the first gay organization, and the majority of these groups have an ultra-left position in that they believe the revolution is possible tomorrow morning. FUORI fights for civil rights. The difference from the other groups is that FUORI is part of the Radical Party and works in the political arena. The other groups have contacts with other parties, but work independently. Ideologically, they are all basically communist; FUORI is socialist — and in Italy there is a big difference. They have nothing to do with the party, of course. The Communist Party excludes all forms of sexual liberation. Even the fight for divorce was made by the Radical Party and not the Communists.

Unfortunately, liberation depends on the evolution of political life. We face a terrible danger: the disappearance of the small parties and the existence of only the two major ones: the Christian Democrats and the Communists. And if we have this political situation all of the work toward personal liberties and cultural change will break down. We face very strong police laws, because the two major parties have made a compromise between them, and they represent eighty percent of the votes. We are heading for a situation without a legal opposition. We will have only the Red Brigades.

Eves: How are they viewed?

Pezzana: It is very difficult, because we can say they belong to the left, but all that they do profits the reactionaries. They kill a politician and the conservatives gain the election.

The struggle of gay people will take a long time here because, as I said earlier, we have no special laws to fight against. Our battle is against moral attitudes, which are harder to recognize. □ his Moscow protest and try to monopolize the defense of Paradjanov, and exclude him. They end up grudgingly allowing him to speak at the end of one of the sessions.

Pezzana is similarly disappointed by the tactics of the mass circulation magazine, Espresso. On the pretext of wanting to do a story on Paradjanov, this publication arranges to meet the author — who discovers to his horror that what the magazine is really after is a list of homosexual Socialist and Communist members of Parliament. Pezzana’s final experience concerns the International Sacharov Days in Rome. — Trans.)

Rome, November 28: The international Sacharov Days were taking place in Rome, and Monday was the last day, featuring film sessions. Touch wood, I say to myself, remembering the man whom the Days are dedicated. I place a call to tell them of my wish to attend and to make a presentation on the subject of Paradjanov — who, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is still a prisoner in the USSR. Me: I’d like to talk to someone from the organizing committee.

Voice: I’m in charge of the Italian organization. Who’s speaking? Angelo Pezzana: For city’s sake, I, you show up and by chance TV picks it up, the whole congress is screwed.

Me: Great, I’ll be right over!

In view of my firm reply, the reception is a bit different; they let me in and begin murmuring to themselves. Meanwhile, who do I see chatting the whole show but Simon Wiesenthal! The Nazi hunter, the Robin Hood of my childhood — how often had I wanted to go to Vienna to find him and tell him how much I admired him. So I ask to speak personally to him. What a fascinating man, how kind and attentive he is, he listens to everything I have to say, tells me he is with me all the way that trip to Moscow — what courage, what a note! Let’s proceed this time, he says: wait until the last official speeches are over, then I’ll announce you from the microphone and you’ll be able to make your presentation. Okay, Herr Wiesenthal, don’t think me too poorly brought up as to want to speak right away. I’ll gladly wait for the slot you, the Chairman, have allowed me.

But right when it ought to be my turn, the Grand Old Man thanks everyone and bows, gets up together with the head table, gives me an annoyed look as if to say, “Look here, we’re leaving now, talk if you wish. With all this noise, no one will listen to you anyhow.” Like in Vienna! Trying to convey my disgust at the chairman’s actions, I get off a few sentences of my presentation, to call attention to Paradjanov, who’s a political prisoner like all the others, but no one is really interested in the fate of Soviet homosexuals.

Alfagot: — Thanks, Herr Wiesenthal! Moral of the story: It’s nice to think that Paradjanov is free (but at what price he has been liberated — I shudder to think); at least the story seems to have a happy ending. There remains the battle against Article 121, the fight not to abandon millions of Soviet homosexuals to their fate. How the Western Communist left act! Until now they haven’t lifted a finger, but I hope for the future. What is certain is the fact that we will not be standing around watching. □ the best party of the year:

- ★ the biggest gay dance in the history of Toronto (not just another disco)
- ★ lesbian/women's music concert featuring IZQUIERDA from Oregon and April Kassirer
- ★ a day-long fair in Queen's Park for all the friends of the gay community: music, balloons, every gay organization in town, clowns, mime, sunshine!
- ★ a Sunday picnic on Hanlan's Point: fun, friends, a 'special' baseball game and free marshmallows for all plus: more entertainment from across Canada • cultural workshops • David Thorstad • gay rock dance • Ferron • films ecumenical service • for more information: in Toronto phone 923-GAYS (24-hour recorded message) • write or drop in to Glad Day Books, 4 Collier Street, north of Bloor at Yonge, 961-4161.

gaydays
in toronto
aug 24-27

HYPNOSIS FOR GAYS

Internationally known hypnotist now offering special cassette tapes for the gay scene. Learn to feel better about yourself, improve your self-image, be able to feel good about being gay.

This cassette tape actually induces hypnosis and accomplishes this!

Send $10 to G.A.Y., Box 2081, Toledo, OH 43604 USA

Montego's Boutique

Custom-made costumes and performance outfits, dresses, lingerie, satin sheets and pajamas, all hand-made to your specifications. Ask for Pearl at Montego's Boutique
157 Dundas St E
362-4377

Your DOWNTOWN HARDWARE & LUMBER

2 LOCATIONS

QUEEN HARDWARE

AND LUMBER LTD.
SINCE 1917

A complete line of materials for your building and remodelling needs...

PROMPT DELIVERY
FREE ON ORDERS OVER $25

DO-IT-YOURSELF BUILDING SUPPLIES

BUILDERS HARDWARE — WISER
STANLEY AMEROCK BLACK & DECKER
DOORS — TRIM — PANELLING — CEMENT
LUMBER & PLYWOOD
PLUS MUCH MUCH MORE...

FOR EXPERT COUNSELLING CALL:

364-6993

TWO LOCATIONS TO SERVE YOU BETTER
311 & 392 QUEEN STREET EAST

ATTRACTIVE ENGINEER seeks lasting intimacy. Loving and/or sex (mutual) only. Only is not essential but welcome when mutual. You should identify clearly with my following description: under 45, slim, clean-shaven, light body hair, circumsised, modest endowment, non-smoker, drug-user, high IQ, rationalist, broad science/technology interests, quiet, well-read. Referring Give your description details please Box 191, Station 1, Toronto, ON M5B 4A1.

ISLINGTON/WEST TORONTO is a gay European, 36, 5'6", well proportioned, versatile, very playful. An multi-lingual and has various hobbies. Has own car. Would like to meet younger to max. 30 to spend my time with love blonds. Would also like to meet other European immigrants and drug dealers. Deal with photo and phone number will be answered (mail). Drawer B60.

LOVELY ADULT BUSINESSMAN seeks companionship with others under 45 who are interested in travel, food, books, theatre, and who are self-supporting. You must be sincere, honest and discreet. I am reasonably well travelled. I seek a travel companion for a Florida trip in the late fall, terms negotiable. Drawer B61.

DARK BLOND, BLUE-EYED MALE, 26, 6'4", 195 lbs., very shy and reserved because of being a gay dition. I seek an older very understanding man I enjoy music, theatre, art and my apartment. Drawer B64.

THIS ATTRACTIVE MALE would like to meet others with similar interests: shows, reading, talking. Have real sex-appeal, but not much into quiches. Am very athletic, affectionate, and muscular body. 140 lbs. 5'9". A good-looking 37 years. Drawer B62.

WELL IN TOWN, HAWAIIAN, 23, 5'11", 170 lbs., enjoy tennis, squash, swimming, music and evenings out. Phone number plus photos for lasting relationship. Box 485, Station K, Toronto.

GREEK PASSIVE 37, 5'3", wants to be understood by Greek active men. I am a very intelligent, slim male, early twenties, but others write too. Enclose photo. Drawer B61.

PROFESSIONAL GUY, 27, seeks friends. I'm a friendly, relaxed person and like eating out. Theatre and tennis most of all and enjoy evenings just chatting among friends. If similar, why not write? Drawer B67.

WELL ENDOWED, SEXY GUY young man wants replies from those who enjoy sensual love, loving, casual or semi-serious relationships. Answer all letters. Drawer B65.

AFFECTIONATE TO YOUNG MEN who have privacy 55, 145 lbs., 5'9". Straight in appearance - like same write for phone number. Box 1042, Station A, Toronto, ON M5W 1G5.

MOUSTACHE, SHORT HAIR, classy very attractive male model, hair-styling, etc. seeks friends. Reply 361-1141.

ACCUMULATED AMATEUR photographer seeks male models. I am artistically errect posing. Windsor and Southwest Ontario. Toronto area. Send photo to phone to John, Box C326, Detroit, MI 48183 USA.

AMATEUR MALE will pose for anyone who desire with one more. Well-travelled with byish looks, can travel 50 mile radius of Toronto. Will also develop and print your 36mm black and white films. Box 763, Streetsville Post Office, Mississauga, ON L4V 1P5.

YOUNG ASIAN FRIEND wanted by successful middle-aged businessman, considered attractive. Must be affectionate, sincere, with few interests. Photo please. Drawer B69.

ATTRACTIVE MALE would like to hear from b1 and gay males. Am 28, 5'6", 145 lbs, into French passive-active, kissing, head, oral and other enjoyable things. Photo and phone all answered. Drawer B65.

W/M, 30, 5'11", 150 LBS., masculine, bilingual, intelligent, well educated, considered attractive, Carlton-Jarvis area. Main interests: theatre, music, the arts in general, plants, reading, camping, hiking, cycling, Tai Chi. I enjoy quiet time, food and drink, polo.

sophical and political bullshitting, movies, concerts, good smoke and gentle sex. Wish to be stable, aware and outgoing masculine guy, around 26-33, with compatible interests, especially someone into outdoor activities, for companion-ship. Would be particularly interested in meeting students of Yang-style Tai Chi for practice together. Drawer B103.

THE OFFICE
SEXUAL RELATIONS

301 Main Street
Windsor
N9A 1J1

BISexual WIDOWER with grown family, early 50's, 6'1", 190 lbs, white hair, glasses, clean shaven, wears tie, ready to be clean, complexion, unfine face, you teeth, once considered "handsome" now considered "distinguished"; healthy, potent, vigorous, W&S establishment, in Who's Who, not wealthy but can afford expensive travel, theatre, good food and good wine, summer cottage, imported cars, etc. and is a tolerant, kind, sincere, kind, sincere, not lonely, withdrawn, misanthropic. Have excellent family relationships and lots of friends. I am a gay man. Would like to meet more youngish males who would enjoy an affectionate, easy-going, non-restrictive relationship with possibilities for travel. You should be intelligent, well-educated, well-mannered and honest. You will find me generous but intolerant of stupidity and unreliability. All contacts to Drawer B102.

ATTRACTIVE MALE seeks young companion in Windsor/Toronto area. Photo appreciated. Drawer B105.

YOUNGER BROTHER, 28, 5'6", short light-brown hair, good looking, clean-shaven, no smoking white male university student. Enjoys music, disco dancing, movies, theatre, ballet, books and outdoors. Meets other brother 22 to 35 with compatible interests for long-term relationship. All sincere replies answered. Drawer B107.

ATTRACTIVE BISEXUAL MALE, 41, enjoys music, sailing, music, sex, would like to meet attractive people. Box 97, Station V, Toronto M6R 2A2.

WOULD LIKE TO MEET mature masculine male with own apart ment to teach me French and/or Spanish. I am 42, 5'10", slim, easy-going, quiet, broadminded and un-inhibited. Short beard, married, clean and discreet. Other replies also welcome and answered. Drawer B96.

GAY, 30, 43, anxious to meet other gay or bi, single, male married. Complete discretion assured. Love to meet unfornal companion or professional athletes, but will answer all. Phone number if possible, but not necessary. Drawer B95.

LOCKER ROOM
SEXUAL RELATIONS
301 Main Street
Windsor
N9A 1J1

$5 each
$15 for $200
(Toronto residents add 4% sales tax)

Eastwind
P.O. Box 554
Windsor, Ontario M4J 4Z2
Wholesale Inquiries Invited
(416) 366-2859
(line open 24 hours)

25-YEAR-OLD SEEMS GUYS under 35, handsome and good time. I'm 5'9", 150 lbs. Write to drawer B94.

YOUNG ATTRACTIVE MALE, 23, 6', 165 lbs., brown hair, blue eyes, tanned, moustache, glasses, seeks older man 30-40, who is into a good relationship. Just coming out, wishes to find special man for open relationship. I'm interested in music, books, swimming, dining, walks, love to travel. I can be affectionate, passionate and I can help you record my feelings. I'm inexperienced but desire understanding gentleness and someone from whom you'll all have husky types, but that is an ideal, though you should be good-looking in firm condition. Not looking too fast sex but hopefully a total sharing relationship with one man. I'm liberal about life and am understanding too. Don't let this opportunity go by. Please reply to Drawer B93.

PROFESSIONAL MALE, 34, articulate, well-read, sincere, sensitive and modest, not ready to be clean, being gay but won't deny it, likes classical music theatre, good food, and travel. I am a gay man. I would like to meet an intelligent, handsome, blue-eyed blond guy under 25, who is into a good relationship. I would like to be given preference, possibly (or all of the above qualities may be disregarded in sympathetic individuals. Live in Toronto. Will travel to T.O. frequently and will move there. Drawer B106.

ATTRACTIVE MALE, 37, 6'1", 190 lbs., discreet, seeks young males 21-30 for good times. Have my own car, like sports and movies. 535-6338.

GAY MALE, 28, desires friends who enjoy outdoor activities, movies, sports, reading, travel. Send photo number or write. Drawer B109.

DEDICATED JOGGER seeks jog partners in the Downsview/Riverside area. If you do minimum four miles daily, lets hear from you. Being serious and dilittantes need not apply. Call 629-9504.

OTAWA
COMING OUT slim attractive masculine guy w/m 28, 5'10", 145 lbs. bisexual clean cut wants to meet young guys and girls for companionship and good times. Write and tell me about yourself. Photo appreciated, discretion essential. Reply to Box 28, 28, 5'7", 144 LBS. relatively attractive, socially active, straight no smoking, clean-shaven, dark hair, blue eyes. Talented artist (portraiture and figurative), interested in modern (contemporary and past), literature (D.H. Lawrence, Thomas Wolfe, Margaret Laurence, Richard Adams), music (Chopin, Gary Chapin, George Strait, Runway Twitty), go to the NAC frequently including theatre, ballet, concerts, am attending the opera series as an experimental experience, enjoy restaurants, am a very good cook, university educated, sincere, good listener, social drinker, non-smoker, like the fresh air, enjoy disco dancing, am a nice person to know - I have many friends both straight and gay. I'm looking for another more open, thoughtful, reliable, intelligent man around my age, who is also reasonably employed, reasonably good looking, and stable - a photo will be appreciated and all answers are confidential. I want to hear from you if you live in Ottawa area. B81.

MATURE, ATTRACTIVE Englishman, many interests, but lonely, seeks compatible companion with view to possible ongoing relationship, sincere replies only please. Reply to B88.

AM 33, INTELLIGENT, bilingual, like classical and folk music, bicycling, etc. I seek loyal friendship, possibility of developing a more open relationship with a male 25 years or older. Richard, Drawer B18.

NEW BRUNSWICK
JOHN PETTICOAT-DUSSEX area. Young white male, 5'6", 125 lbs., brown hair, eyes, seeks companion for sexual and social purposes. I introduce me to gay living. My interests include art, music and writing, Pettilcoat, with limited travel to Moncton, Sussex area. Phone 756-2571, or write: V.E. Bennett, Pettilcoat NB, E0A 2Y0.

FRIENDS

MONTREAL BILINGUAL bisexual academic woman, 38, Fields, philosophy, arts, social sciences, having travelled, wish to meet articulate and mature 140-500 women friends. Drawer B54.

HOMES

3RD YEAR OF U OF D RAMA student seeks room/furnish in downtown house/apartment this September. Am non-smoker, clean-shaven, gay. Drawer B87.

NON-SMOKER, FEMALE OR MALE share 8-room Edwardian 3-story house, Spadina/Dupont, with male couple. Prefer grad/master student or professional, 21-30. Available Labour Day. $265 mo, less with housework. 921-2864 evenings.

FORMING CO-OP in west Beaches area. Two rooms $90 and $100 plus utilities. Working parents or mature students. 694-5596.

MALE, 27, NON-SMOKER has furnished apartment to share with Westley area. Very reasonable rent. 865-0721 after 5.

28 YEARS OLD, MID-TWENTIES, wishing to live alone. Seeking interesting and unique setting, preferably close to downtown. Commencing end of August. B84.

SELF-SUFFICIENT, HOME PROUD, artistic man to share attractive furnished apartment at York and Yonge with business woman. Own room. $185 per month. Drawer B70.

RELIABLE, STEADILY-EMPLOYED male 30, seeks same to find and furnish apartment in York and Yonge. $61-6126 evenings.

DOWNTOWN TORONTO bachelor apt for the summer. I would like to find a country or seaside place in exchange. B28.

TERMINUS BATHS
600 BAY ST.
TORONTO
THE NEVER CLOSE

LARGE THREE STOREY HOUSE with maximum population of four needs a fourth. Your own large room. Share kitchen on your floor with one other. Bus at door. Park subway five minutes walk. Live for $3.45 per day. Move in Sept. 1st. Call 921-9404 or 465-9318.

MONTREAL
QUITE PROFESSIONAL WHITE MALE near to Montreal, 35, wishes apt in gay congenial setting near downtown for Sept-Oct. Fluent in English and French. Tel. 365-2624.

WORK

TORONTO ORGANIZATIONAL GENIUS with design, promotion and typing skills, seriously interested in being a volunteer willing to work like a volunteer in a full time salary position in a small business. Warm supportive atmosphere provided. Salary applicant desired. Send resume: PinkType, Box 639, Stn A, Toronto, M5T 1B6.

MALE 10 seeks full time employment as an apprentice hairdresser, waiter or junior office position (no field clerk etc.) If you can help out please write to drawer B98. Thank-you.

LICENSED OIA OPTICIAN wishes employment in central Toronto area. Two years dispensing experience. Straight looking, 31, mustache and clean-shaven. See resume. Available Oct 17/89. B112.

FOR SMALL MAINTENANCE JOBS including cleaning of apartments and commercial properties... part and full time. Send name, number and short resume to: Fauria Management Services Limited, 242 Carlton Street Toronto.

CLEANING PERSON. Have it done fast by an individual. Apartment cleaning, painting etc. Area. 922-0182 or 921-9644.

CHASER'S BEST TIMES now hiring advertising sales reps/distributors in all areas. Send resume to Publisher, 2700 Lakeshore Publishing, P.O. Box 3719, Los Angeles, California 90028, or call (213) 463-0000.

YOUNG MAN AVAILABLE for apartment or house cleaning duties. Weekly or bi-weekly basis. All areas. Please send resume, references. Drawer A69.

BOOKKEEPER/ACCOUNTANT with 10 years experience in retail company. Experience and references required. Box B111.

LETTERS

PRISONER CONFINED in Dorchester Pen would like to have understanding gay pals from any part of the free world interests include art, music, writing, poetry, etc. Write Bruce Alan Karcher, Drawer A, Cornerstone N.B. Canada. (Photo with newspaper).

MAKE NEW FRIENDS throughout Canada and the U.S. Join GAY-MATES, a pan-can club for gay men. Write to: GAY-MATES, Box 3043, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada.

ATTENTION INMATES. If you are in prison, please contact MCC of the Rockies, P.O. Box 9536, Denver, Colorado 80209.

IF YOU ARE IN CONFINEMENT in an Ohio prison, I have 1 year to go. My name is Larry A. Smith. I'm 38 years old, single, white, 5'8", 155 lbs. brown hair, blue eyes and I'm gay. I receive no mail. Please write Larry A. Smith at: P.O. Box 511, Columbus, Ohio 43216.

READING

NUDE BOYS AND MEN all types, sizes and shapes! Largest and finest selection of Gay films and magazines in the world. Live out! Send Canadian dollar. Send $1 for photo illustrated catalogue. LETTERS TO GAY, P.O. Box 1135, Amsterdam 100, HOLLAND.

TRAVEL

KEY WEST LALAND HOUSE vaca- tion rooms and apartments. Large enclosed sun deck, pool in historic area. Daily and weekly rates. 1125 Flamingo Street, #208, 340-5289. FT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA, Beta Men Vacation Motel. Friendly interior, swimming pool, private beach. Also rooms $14 nightly. Efficiency $16 nightly for two (305) 566-4376.

OTHER

75 HOMER CB360, 6000 mi, winter-passed, never-driven, clean, windshield, rack, air horns, cotter chain, etc. Call after 7-924-9863.

ATTENDING ATTORNEYS attractive, hospitable, W&S, DC men between ages of 25-50 for lust and friendship. Send your first-class photo resus during your stop overs. Box B104.

THE LESBIAN GUIDE BOOK: GALT's Guide, 1978. Thoroughly detailed annual pocket-size international lesbian bar/club directory. Complete directory. The fifth edition: all lists with 30 other countries - 3500 listings, $7.00 only (includes first-class photo and guaranteed discretion) from GALT's GUIDE, 1155 Montgomery Street, Suite 100, San Francisco, CA 94105 - two weeks delivery.

ATTENTION GAY PHILATELISTS: I am a collector who would like to share my collection of British, Canadian, British my particular interests, but all enquiries welcome. B98.

SEEKING GAY ATTENTION ANITA and "QUEEN OF THE NITE" New 45 by CASSIE CALVER. 100% GAY. Write to: Anita Music, P.O. Box 2879, Washington DC 20013. Bulk rates on request.

ARE YOU ACADEMIC or professional? Student? Want involvement with others like yourself? Join the Gay Academic Society. We are a group of your campus or in your community. Write GALT for Chapter-Start Kit. 8560 Hollywood Blvd, Los Angeles, CA 90068. All inquiries confidential.

The Community Page is a listing of Canadian gay groups which primarily direct themselves toward alleviating or struggling against gay oppression. It includes democratically constituted organizations, cooperatively run clubs and community centres, bookstores which sell gay and feminist literature, and community gay periodsicals. If you wish to be listed send information to The Body Politic, Box 789, Station A, Toronto, ON M5W 1A9. Be sure to notify us of any change in information.

ABITIBI

Association gale de l'Abitibi, c/o ADGO, c/o Succ. C, Montreal, PQ H2L 4K7.

BRANDON

Friends of Brandon, P.O. Box 492, Brandon, MB R7A 2Z4. PH: (431) 725-0930.

CALGARY

Dignity/Calgary, Box 1492, St. N., Calgary, AB T2H 2T7.

Gay Academic Union, Box G-262, St. N. Calgary, AB T2H 2T7.

Information and Resources, Box 312-223-224, 1405 Calgary, AB T2R 0G8. PH: (403) 264-3911. Mon-Fri 10-10 PM.

Metropolitan Community Church, 1703 11st St. N., Calgary, AB T2P 1G6. PH: (403) 266-1806.

CORNERBROOK

Community Homophile Association of Nfld (CHAM), Box 905, Corner Brook, NB A2H 6J2. GOWN/NG Organization of the Western Newfoundland can be contacted at CHAM's address above.

EDMONTON

Club 78, 10242, 106th St., Edmonton, AB T5J 1H7. PH: (403) 423-5051.

Dignity/Edmonton, P.O. Box 53, Edmonton, AB T5J 2G9.

Gay Alliance Toward Equality, Box 152, Edmonton, AB T5J 2Z2. 1014-101 St. N., PH: (403) 424-8361.

Gay Friends of Fredrickton, Box 152, Edmonton, AB T5J 2M8. PH: (403) 458-7861.

FREDRICKTON

Gay Friends of Fredrickton, Box 152, Edmonton, AB T5J 2M8. PH: (403) 458-7861.

GUELPH

Guelph Gay Alliance, Box 773, Guelph, ON N1H 6L4. Gayline: (519) 836-4550.

HALIFAX

The Alternative Breakshop, Site 301, 1655 Barrington St., Halifax, NS, B3J 128.

Atlantic Provincials Political Lesbians for Example (APPLE), P.O. Box 3611, Halifax South Station, NS, B3J 3K6.

Gay Alliance for Love, Box 3611, Halifax South Station, NS, B3J 3K6. Gayline: (902) 429-6960.

Gay Youth Halifax, c/o Wendell Allen, Apt. 1913, 13335 Park St., Halifax, NS, B3J 2K9.

HAMILTON

Master Homophile Assoc., DC1, Box 44, St. N., Hamilton, ON L8L 7Y5. Gayline: (416) 527-0036.

Also at the above address.

Gay Women of Hamilton

KINGSTON

Kingston Women's Centre, Queen's University, Student Movement, 3rd Floor, Kingston, ON, Queen's Homophile Assoc., c/o Kingston Affiliates Centre, 51 Queen's Cres., Queen's University, Kingston, ON K7L 2P7. PH: (613) 547-3636.

KITCHENER/WATERLOO

Gay Rights Organization of Waterloo (GROW), Box 2632, Station B, Kitchener, ON N2H 1S62.

Lesbian Organization of N. (L.O.N.), c/o Federation of Students, University of Waterloo, Waterloo, ON, N2L 3P1.

Waterloo Universities' Gay Liberation Movement, Federation of Students, University of Waterloo, Waterloo, ON, N2L 3P1. PH: (519) 885-100, Ext. 2372.

LONDON

Homophile Assoc. of London, ON, 645 Colborne St., London, ON, N6A 3Z2. PH: (519) 433-3782.

London Lesbian Collective, P.O. Box 4724, Station C, London, ON, N6W 5L7.

MISSISSAUGA/BRAMPTON

GEA/Gay Equality Mississauga, P.O. Box 546, Station A, Mississauga, ON L5A 2Z7.

Gayline West: 791-8974. For counselling telephone service.

Montreal

Association Homophile, 1217 Croissant, Montreal, PQ H3G 2B1. PH: (514) 866-2131.

Association Communautaire Homophile de l'Université de Montréal, 300 Jean-Baptiste, Local 1265A, Pav. des Sciences, Université, Université de Montréal, Montréal, PQ H3T 1J6.

Association pour les Droits des Gais du Québec, 36, Succ. C, Montréal, PQ H2L 4J7. 1964 St. Louis, PH: (514) 862-9819.

Camp Femina, 3617 boul. St. Laurent, Montreal, PQ H3A 896.

Dignity/Montreal, C. 641, St. Louis, Montreal, PQ H3G 2B1. PH: (514) 862-9819.

Association Communautaire Homophile de l'Université de Montréal, 300 Jean-Baptiste, Local 1265A, Pav. des Sciences, Université, Université de Montréal, Montréal, PQ H3T 1J6.

REGINA

Alpino Fellowship Society, 1400, 22nd St., Regina, SK S4P 3J8.

ST-JEROME, PQ

Association des gais de la Laurentide, 222, St-Jérôme, PQ, J7Y 2T9.

ST-JOHN'S

Community Homophile Assoc. of Nfld/CHAM, Box 613, St. John's, NF A1C 5A5.

SASKATOON

Gay Academic Union, Box 419, Sub P.O. 6, Saskatoon, SK S7N 0W0.

Gay Community Centre, Box 1662, Saskatoon, SK S7N 3B8. 310 St. E. (2nd floor), PH: (306) 562-0972.

At the above address.

Gay Alliance of Youth, Grapenew, a group for Christian and Jewish gays, PH: (306) 343-5963.

Lesbian Caucus, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan's Liberation, P.O. Box 4021, Saskatoon, SK.

Shuffle Jump Press, 21-303 10th St. W., Saskatoon, SK.

Subcommittee on Gay Rights, c/o Saskatchewan Association on Human Rights, 311 20th St. W., Saskatoon, SK.

SHERBROOKE

CHAL-Estrie, C/P 2032 Succ. Jacques-Cartier, Sherbrooke, PQ, J1L 3J1.

THUNDER BAY

Northern Women's Centre, 316 Bay St., Thunder Bay, ON (PH: 807) 345-7802.

TORONTO

Catalyst Press, 315 Bloorville Ave., Scarborough, ON, M1N 2A5.

Chatsworth Charitable Foundation, 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8.

Community Homophile Association of Toronto (CHAT), 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8.

Congregation B'nai Kehillah of Toronto for Gay Jews, c/o 66 Gloucester St., Toronto, ON, M5G 1L5.

Gay and Services every 2nd & 4th Friday of the month, 10 Trinity Square/Eaton Centre, for more information, call 923-GAYS.

Dignity, Box 249, St. E., Toronto, ON, M5B 4E2.

Free Lesbians and Gays (FLAG), 277 Bessley St., Apt. 2, Toronto, ON, M5A 2J3. PH: (416) 362-3678.

Gay Academic Union, c/o Prof. John A. Lee, Scarborough College, U of T, West Hill, ON, M1C 1A4.

Gay Alliance at York, c/o CVSF, 4700 Keele St., Downsview, ON, M3J 1P1. Gayline: 216 Van Horne St., PH: (416) 867-3509 or 667-3632.

Gay Academic Toward Equality (GATE), P.O. Box 156, Station P, Toronto, ON, M5S 2S7. PH: (416) 964-0448.

Gay Community Calendar, 24-hour recorded message, PH: (416) 923-GAYS.

Gay Community Services Centre, 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8. Distress and counselling line: (416) 364-9635. Drop-in, Monday through Thursday, 7-10:30 PM, PH: 541-11:30 PM.

Gays at Toronto (GAT), c/o SAC Office, Hart House Circle, University of Toronto, Toronto, ON.

Gay Television Collective, c/o Box 575, Station K, Toronto, ON, M5P 2H1. PH: (416) 929-0269.

Gay Youth, Toronto, 29 Granby St., Suite 311, (416) 366-5664. Meetings at 515 Church St., Community Centre at 7:30 on Tuesdays.

Gay Day Bookstore, a CAW stall at Yonge/Toronto, ON, 404 1st St. W., PH: (416) 961-4181.

Harbinger: Gay Men's Drop-In, Tues, 12-6 PM, 214 Vanier Residence, York University.

Harbinger: Lesbian Drop-In, Wed 3-5 PM, 214 Vanier Residence, York University.

Hassle-Free Clinic, VO testing and information, 2 Homewood Ave., Suite 101, Toronto, ON, PH: (416) 522-3232.

Integrity, Gay Angelina, 20 Berrymans St., Toronto, ON, PH: (416) 525-4047.

Lesbian and Gay Trade Station K, Toronto, ON, MAP 2G3.

The John Demian Foundation, P.O. Box 127, St. N., Toronto, ON, M6R 3A1.

Libertarians for Gay Rights, c/o Ian Young, 315 Bloorville Ave., Scarborough, ON, M1N 2S6.

PHILADELPHIA

Philly Triangle Press, P.O. Box 639, St. N., Toronto, ON, M5W 1G2. PH: (416) 593-3936.

Three of Cups, Women's Coffee House, 342 Jarvis St., Toronto, ON, M5T 2G8. PH: (416) 867-2862.

TAG, Peer counselling telephone service, Box 6706, St. N., Toronto, ON, M5W 1X5. PH: (416) 964-6800.

Toronto Women's Bookstore, 85 Harbord St., Toronto, ON, M5S 1G5. PH: (416) 922-8744.

Transvestites in Toronto, P.O. Box 314, Station A, Toronto, ON, M5W 1G3. PH: (416) 466-1272.

Tri-Ad Charitable Foundation, 8 Irwin Ave., Toronto, ON, M4Y 1K9. PH: (416) 424-2525.

Wages/Lesbians, Box 38, St. N., Toronto, ON, M6G 4E1. PH: (416) 921-0001.

Gay Alliance of Youth, Grapenew, a group for Christian and Jewish gays, PH: (306) 343-5963.

Lesbian Caucus, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan's Liberation, P.O. Box 4021, Saskatoon, SK.

Shuffle Jump Press, 21-303 10th St. W., Saskatoon, SK.

Subcommittee on Gay Rights, c/o Saskatchewan Association on Human Rights, 311 20th St. W., Saskatoon, SK.

SHERBROOKE

CHAL-Estrie, C/P 2032 Succ. Jacques-Cartier, Sherbrooke, PQ, J1L 3J1.

THUNDER BAY

Northern Women's Centre, 316 Bay St., Thunder Bay, ON (PH: 807) 345-7802.

TORONTO

Catalyst Press, 315 Bloorville Ave., Scarborough, ON, M1N 2A5.

Chatsworth Charitable Foundation, 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8.

Community Homophile Association of Toronto (CHAT), 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8.

Congregation B'nai Kehillah of Toronto for Gay Jews, c/o 66 Gloucester St., Toronto, ON, M5G 1L5.

Gay and Services every 2nd & 4th Friday of the month, 10 Trinity Square/Eaton Centre, for more information, call 923-GAYS.

Dignity, Box 249, St. E., Toronto, ON, M5B 4E2.

Free Lesbians and Gays (FLAG), 277 Bessley St., Apt. 2, Toronto, ON, M5A 2J3. PH: (416) 362-3678.

Gay Academic Union, c/o Prof. John A. Lee, Scarborough College, U of T, West Hill, ON, M1C 1A4.

Gay Alliance at York, c/o CVSF, 4700 Keele St., Downsview, ON, M3J 1P1. Gayline: 216 Van Horne St., PH: (416) 867-3509 or 667-3632.

Gay Academic Toward Equality (GATE), P.O. Box 156, Station P, Toronto, ON, M5S 2S7. PH: (416) 964-0448.

Gay Community Calendar, 24-hour recorded message, PH: (416) 923-GAYS.

Gay Community Services Centre, 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8. Distress and counselling line: (416) 364-9635. Drop-in, Monday through Thursday, 7-10:30 PM, PH: 541-11:30 PM.

Gays at Toronto (GAT), c/o SAC Office, Hart House Circle, University of Toronto, Toronto, ON.

Gay Television Collective, c/o Box 575, Station K, Toronto, ON, M5P 2H1. PH: (416) 929-0269.

Gay Youth, Toronto, 29 Granby St., Suite 311, (416) 366-5664. Meetings at 515 Church St., Community Centre at 7:30 on Tuesdays.

Gay Day Bookstore, a CAW stall at Yonge/Toronto, ON, 404 1st St. W., PH: (416) 961-4181.

Harbinger: Gay Men's Drop-In, Tues, 12-6 PM, 214 Vanier Residence, York University.

Harbinger: Lesbian Drop-In, Wed 3-5 PM, 214 Vanier Residence, York University.

Hassle-Free Clinic, VO testing and information, 2 Homewood Ave., Suite 101, Toronto, ON, PH: (416) 522-3232.

Integrity, Gay Angelina, 20 Berrymans St., Toronto, ON, PH: (416) 525-4047.

Lesbian and Gay Trade Station K, Toronto, ON, MAP 2G3.

The John Demian Foundation, P.O. Box 127, St. N., Toronto, ON, M6R 3A1.

Libertarians for Gay Rights, c/o Ian Young, 315 Bloorville Ave., Scarborough, ON, M1N 2S6.

PHILADELPHIA

Philly Triangle Press, P.O. Box 639, St. N., Toronto, ON, M5W 1G2. PH: (416) 593-3936.

Three of Cups, Women's Coffee House, 342 Jarvis St., Toronto, ON, M5T 2G8. PH: (416) 867-2862.

TAG, Peer counselling telephone service, Box 6706, St. N., Toronto, ON, M5W 1X5. PH: (416) 964-6800.

Toronto Women's Bookstore, 85 Harbord St., Toronto, ON, M5S 1G5. PH: (416) 922-8744.

Transvestites in Toronto, P.O. Box 314, Station A, Toronto, ON, M5W 1G3. PH: (416) 466-1272.

Tri-Ad Charitable Foundation, 8 Irwin Ave., Toronto, ON, M4Y 1K9. PH: (416) 424-2525.

Wages/Lesbians, Box 38, St. N., Toronto, ON, M6G 4E1. PH: (416) 921-0001.

Gay Alliance of Youth, Grapenew, a group for Christian and Jewish gays, PH: (306) 343-5963.

Lesbian Caucus, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan's Liberation, P.O. Box 4021, Saskatoon, SK.

Shuffle Jump Press, 21-303 10th St. W., Saskatoon, SK.

Subcommittee on Gay Rights, c/o Saskatchewan Association on Human Rights, 311 20th St. W., Saskatoon, SK.

SHERBROOKE

CHAL-Estrie, C/P 2032 Succ. Jacques-Cartier, Sherbrooke, PQ, J1L 3J1.

THUNDER BAY

Northern Women's Centre, 316 Bay St., Thunder Bay, ON (PH: 807) 345-7802.

TORONTO

Catalyst Press, 315 Bloorville Ave., Scarborough, ON, M1N 2A5.

Chatsworth Charitable Foundation, 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8.

Community Homophile Association of Toronto (CHAT), 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8.

Congregation B'nai Kehillah of Toronto for Gay Jews, c/o 66 Gloucester St., Toronto, ON, M5G 1L5.

Gay and Services every 2nd & 4th Friday of the month, 10 Trinity Square/Eaton Centre, for more information, call 923-GAYS.

Dignity, Box 249, St. E., Toronto, ON, M5B 4E2.

Free Lesbians and Gays (FLAG), 277 Bessley St., Apt. 2, Toronto, ON, M5A 2J3. PH: (416) 362-3678.

Gay Academic Union, c/o Prof. John A. Lee, Scarborough College, U of T, West Hill, ON, M1C 1A4.

Gay Alliance at York, c/o CVSF, 4700 Keele St., Downsview, ON, M3J 1P1. Gayline: 216 Van Horne St., PH: (416) 867-3509 or 667-3632.

Gay Academic Toward Equality (GATE), P.O. Box 156, Station P, Toronto, ON, M5S 2S7. PH: (416) 964-0448.

Gay Community Calendar, 24-hour recorded message, PH: (416) 923-GAYS.

Gay Community Services Centre, 29 Granby St., Toronto, ON, M5B 1H8. Distress and counselling line: (416) 364-9635. Drop-in, Monday through Thursday, 7-10:30 PM, PH: 541-11:30 PM.

Gays at Toronto (GAT), c/o SAC Office, Hart House Circle, University of Toronto, Toronto, ON.

Gay Television Collective, c/o Box 575, Station K, Toronto, ON, M5P 2H1. PH: (416) 929-0269.

Gay Youth, Toronto, 29 Granby St., Suite 311, (416) 366-5664. Meetings at 515 Church St., Community Centre at 7:30 on Tuesdays.

Gay Day Bookstore, a CAW stall at Yonge/Toronto, ON, 404 1st St. W., PH: (416) 961-4181.

Harbinger: Gay Men's Drop-In, Tues, 12-6 PM, 214 Vanier Residence, York University.

Harbinger: Lesbian Drop-In, Wed 3-5 PM, 214 Vanier Residence, York University.

Hassle-Free Clinic, VO testing and information, 2 Homewood Ave., Suite 101, Toronto, ON, PH: (416) 522-3232.

Integrity, Gay Angelina, 20 Berrymans St., Toronto, ON, PH: (416) 525-4047.

Lesbian and Gay Trade Station K, Toronto, ON, MAP 2G3.

The John Demian Foundation, P.O. Box 127, St. N., Toronto, ON, M6R 3A1.

Libertarians for Gay Rights, c/o Ian Young, 315 Bloorville Ave., Scarborough, ON, M1N 2S6.

PHILADELPHIA

Philly Triangle Press, P.O. Box 639, St. N., Toronto, ON, M5W 1G2. PH: (416) 593-3936.

Three of Cups, Women's Coffee House, 342 Jarvis St., Toronto, ON, M5T 2G8. PH: (416) 867-2862.

TAG, Peer counselling telephone service, Box 6706, St. N., Toronto, ON, M5W 1X5. PH: (416) 964-6800.

Toronto Women's Bookstore, 85 Harbord St., Toronto, ON, M5S 1G5. PH: (416) 922-8744.

Transvestites in Toronto, P.O. Box 314, Station A, Toronto, ON, M5W 1G3. PH: (416) 466-1272.

Tri-Ad Charitable Foundation, 8 Irwin Ave., Toronto, ON, M4Y 1K9. PH: (416) 424-2525.

Wages/Lesbians, Box 38, St. N., Toronto, ON, M6G 4E1. PH:

Welcome to a great new magazine.

OCTOBER 1978 $1.00

The Politics Of Being Queer by Paul Goodman
Playing Lindsay Kemp's Salomé Dykes Smash Sexist Bars
The Five Hot Spots To Get In Shape In Toronto

Body Politic

A MAGAZINE FOR GAY LIBERATION

On a Saturday afternoon early in November 1950, five men met at the home of Harry Hay in Los Angeles.
All of them were pledged to secrecy.

IN THE VERY BEGINNING

THE ORIGINS OF THE GAY MOVEMENT IN THE UNITED STATES

PLUS—Special Report
S&M

An 8 page section that covers it all.

and gay men all across the country. It will still be a solid source of analysis for gay people around the world as well. And it will still be the place to find reviews celebrating, dissecting — and sometimes damning — gay images in the arts, books, film and the media, with some of the most cogent, incisive writing you'll find on the topic anywhere.

In short, you'll find everything that was good about the old TBP — plus a lot more.

So why not take a look? Subscription rates are still as low as in the "old" days: at $5 for ten issues* you'll also save 50% over the newsstand price.

But act now. With increasing postage and production costs, we're not going to be this cheap for long.

That's right,
The Body Politic.
Beginning in October,
The Body Politic will be sporting a new look — bigger, brighter, and better than ever.

The cover will be 25% larger than it is now — no more getting lost on the newsstand. Behind that cover you'll find 48 pages every issue, up from our present 32.
And those 48 pages will be some of the most exciting yet, with hard-hitting new features, bouncy new columns,
and lots of striking, vibrant visual images.

Of course, not everything about the new Body Politic will be new.

TBP will still be the sharpest and most authoritative gay newsmagazine available in Canada, with continuing coverage of the lives,
work, and liberation struggles of lesbians

Thanks for the invite.
Count me in.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ POSTAL CODE _____

*2nd class. $9.50 First Class. American subscribers, add $3.50 for postage.
Send to: TBP, Box 7289, Stn A, Toronto, ON, M5W 1X9.